Mother Of Mine.
She healed all the little hurt fingers
With magical kisses sublime,
And rocked me to sleep on her bosom
That wonderful mother of mine.

She nursed me through health and
through sickness,
With a love no word could define;
And bore all my crosses of childhood,
This kind, loving mother of mine.

She faithfully followed me later,
And on through the cycles of time,
With goodness and kindness and
mercy,
This true-hearted mother of mine.

And when at last God shall call her
To the holy bright city divine,
May he richly reward and repay her,
That dear, angel mother of mine.
—Norma Holman Mangis.

Mothers' Day.
Mothers' day was appropriately observed at the various churches last Sunday. Special music was rendered emphasizing mother love. At the congregational church a white or red carnation was given each person attending who did not already have one. Several out of town mothers were in the city visiting sons or daughters. Many flower gifts were given or sent to the living mothers, to convey the love in which she is held.

After the flower supply was almost exhausted a tiny tot came into a flower shop on Second street with 25 cents tightly clasped in a moist and chubby hand.

"I want some flowers for my mama," lisped the little voice.

When told the limitations of 25 cents the little face dropped in disappointment and the little girl faltered, "I want some pretty flowers and it is to all a surprise for my mamma."

Touched by the little tot's love, the flower lady brought out a more expensive plant, which was dressed up in a bright wrapping, ready to deliver to Mother and the little girl was made happy.

Other little tots came, with just as much enthusiasm, some proudly stating that they earned the money for their gifts themselves.

Mrs. Marden's Classes.
It was the writer's pleasure a few days ago to observe Mrs. Victor Marden's class of four year old pupils, in the Dunning system of music. The results accomplished with the little tots just out of babyhood are remarkable. The lines of the grand staff and the ledger lines were placed on the black board, and these little folks, without hesitancy, named the notes which accompanied each line or space. A play device with a blank grand staff so a had lines, spaces, ledger lines and spaces correctly filled with the letters representing the notes, in a competitive game. In this game, the little homeless notes were sorted out and taken to their homes by little fingers, the children explaining that notes were pictures of tones. The time value of the notes was correctly given by these little people and they demonstrated rhythm by interpreting the language of the piano. Without previous drill they marched, skipped, danced or seemed to sleep, as the music "talked" to them, when Mrs. Marden played the piano, making rapid changes in the character of the music. Notes were read, then sounded on the piano. The children enthusiastically gave the name of the first composer of music, Scarlatti. The singing of their class song was delightful in its unadorned simplicity.

Stories and songs are given in these classes to stimulate ideas and cultivate intelligence. Musical principles are taught from memory verses, which are easily retained and then real piano work illustrates these principles. Mrs. Marden told us that she has classes of children in the various stages of development and a class of adults who came once a week. The children are taught the fundamentals of music by means of disks, rhythm sticks and movable musical characters.
