OPEN SHOP DRIVE DECLARED FAILURE

By United News WASHINGTON, May 24 - The concerted effort of employers to destroy trade unionism - their "open shop campaign" - has failed, according to Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Gompers said confession of this was made at the annual convention of the American Manufacturers' association in New York last week. He quoted the committee on industrial betterment as having protected the "defensive position" into which the members had been forced by labor, and assailed a suggestion of offensive measures by labor. At the same time Gompers announced the federation is to set on her way a "great organizing campaign."

"Organization work continues at all times," said Gompers, "but this work is to be intensified. The message of trade unionism will be carried to every corner of the land, to the limit of our powers. Its encouragement and protection will be offered to the workers everywhere. "American labor wants the value of organization to be at the service of the country, for the sake of the protection of the workers and for the sake of the value of organization in the stimulation, encouragement and facilitation of production."

Gompers declared the failure of the open shop campaign demonstrated two things: "First, that the working man wants trade union organization and will not be driven from its protection, and, "Second, that trade unionism is fundamentally right and that it is a part of democracy and that the logical strength of its position is proof against successful attack."

The Pageant Story Day by Day

The Missions

Through the French Canadian voyageurs of Lewis and Clark and of the Astor expedition in 1811, the Flathead Indians learned of the religion of the White Man. They sent a deputation to St. Louis asking for the "White man's book" (Bible) of the white man's God. This appeal reached Father F. J. D-Smet who offered himself for the Oregon missions. In 1840 he reached the country of the Rocky mountains where he served for 23 years. When he bade his Indian children goodbye, it was with a prayer, "May heaven preserve them from dangerous contact."

The city of the Flatheads was also heard by the Leen far away in New England and Rev. Jason Lee and Daniel Lee were received in Oregon by Dr. McLoughlin with open handed hospitality in September, 1854. "Pulpit Rock" (south of the present high school building) marks the site of The Dalles Indian mission. From this first rock, the oldest pulpit of the west, Rev. Daniel Lee and the Missionaries Perkins and Brewer, gave the Wascos, a word about the ground, the message of spiritual life, as well as instructions on the tilling of the soil and the making of homes. The families of these devoted men founded the earliest homes in our city. The home of Missionary Perkins marked the birthplace of the first white child born in The Dalles, a baby girl, in January 1841. Joseph Luxillo and Billy Chinook, devout Indians and friends of the mission family, were baptized in the charmed waters of the Wascomam Springs (in the high school block). They retained their Christian teachings till the end of life.

Dr. Marcus Whitman and Henry Spaulding, with their brides (who were the first white women, whose feet should press the soil where The Dalles now stands) together with W. H. Gray, answered the call for the "White Man's Book of Heaven" in 1836. These were the first white homes in the inland Empire, now the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and western Montana. Mrs. Whitman spent the winter of 1842 at The Dalles, while her husband was on his famous winter's ride to the states to save Oregon from British claims. Whitman and the mission family were massacred by the Cayuse Indians at Waiilatpu in 1847. The blow fell on November 29th, when Dr. Whitman, his wife, and seven other persons were put to death in the most barbarous manner. Five more victims followed in a few days. Fifty women and children were held as captives, but they were rescued by the Hudson's Bay company. News of the massacre did not reach Washington, D. C., for several months and the news aroused a wave of sentiment very important in finally getting congress to establish a territorial form of government for the protection of the settlement.
