Millionaire Servant Girls And Cooks Hieing Back to Homelands

By Alexander F. Jones (United News Staff Correspondent) CHICAGO, June 10.—Poor little Hulda!

Passing the portals of Ellis Island and leaving all but the memories of dear old Sweden behind her, she grips the little bundle of old-fashioned clothes in one red-knuckled hand; tightens the old family shawl about her face with the other, and flees to the great American kitchen, there to toil and slave—and to kid the ice-man and break dishes.

A pitiful figure in Hulda and many touching little pieces, typed in her behalf, have touched the heart strings where they are the tonicist.

But did you ever see her on the way back? Sweet cookie! Let me take you by the hand.

Forty Huldas were in the office of Thomas Sells, deputy clerk in the United States court here, Thursday, applying for passports back to Sweden, to Germany, to Latvia, to where not. There were also the wives of a few millionaires, ambitious to spend the summer at Deauville or on the Riviera.

It was hard to pick out the Huldas from the million dollar wives, except that they were better dressed. Nice street frocks, smart little hats with that touch that spells money, silk stockings—

"Look them over and say good-bye," commented Sells, "they are on their way back to the old country, loaded with enough real American dollars to sink a ship. Most of them are cooks, maids and domestics, according to their applications. It has been this way for two months. They don't care about falling wages. They have got theirs. They have saved their money—and who wouldn't, the way they have charged for their expert services? Some of them have saved enough money in a few years to keep them in red herring the rest of their lives. The average number of those returning who apply for passports here is over 50 daily."

There was one very plain woman in the line, plain of face and costume. Her shoes were square toed, the seams of her suit were shiny, and her hat didn't have that something that spells money.

When she had received her documents and had prudently passed on, an eye was turned on the record of her nativity, occupation and intentions. It was an American—a school teacher.

"And has probably worked 20 years saving up for this trip," commented the clerk.

NEW YORK POLICE SIT ON GREENWICH VILLAGE

By Westbrook Pegler (United News Staff Correspondent) NEW YORK, June 10.—The atmosphere is being blown clear out of Greenwich Village, where free speaking shoe clerks used to sit in basement tea rooms and talk free love—and talk it and talk it—with little bob-haired girl stenographers wearing radical smocks.

The police have stopped all dancing. This stopped the flow of sight-seers from Yonkers and Indianapolis who used to come down to listen to the talk of the free thinkers.

Business is bum in the Purple Pup and is going to be more bum. The White Poodle, the Studio, the Blue Bird, the Village Hearth, the Lantern and the rest of them aren't much without dancing. The famous old Liberal club is out of business. Of course there are still places in the village where liquor can be had, but in that respect Greenwich Village has nothing at all on Broadway and it isn't half so clean.

Philosophy is lagging down in the village. The jazz basements are reformed.
