Nay, speak no ill. a kindly word Can never leave a sting behind; And oh to breathe each tale we've heard Is far beneath a noble mind : For oft a better seed is sown By choosing thus a kinder plan; For if but little good we know,

Let's speak of all the good we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide, Would fain another's fault efface; How can it please our human pride To prove humanity but base! No. let it reach a higher made, A noble estimate of man; Be carnest in the search of good,

And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill, but intent be To others' failings as your own! If you're the first a fault to see, Be not the first to make it known. For life is but a passing day, No lips can tell how brief the stay;

Be earnest in the search of good, And speak of all the best we may.

BUTTER.

The oldest mention of butter (and even that is an obscure one) is found in Herodotos, who says the Scythiand separate that which rises to the licious than that which remains below it." This perhaps goes no farther than cream, but Hippocrates, who wrote 400 years before Christ, and was almost contemporary with Herodotus, writes of cream, that when it is violently agitated, "the fat part which is light, rises to the surface and becomes what is called butter. The heavy and thick part, which re mains below, is kneaded and dried, and is known by the name of hippace. The whey or serum remains in the moddle." Here we have butter and cheese satisfactorily produced at least two thousand years ago. But it does not appear from Hippo | thereof. ancient writers who mention it, that butter was ever used as an article of ordinary food. That learned Greek physician speaks of its emollient qualities, and prescribes it externally as follows: as a medicine. Strabto says that the Lusitantans used butter instead of oil; and Æ ian mentions that the writes that, " in cold countries, used in the baths." It is never mentioned by any Greek and Italy shall be optional. or Roman writer, as used in coockery, or at the table.

The people of Germany appear to very early period, though how early both butter and cheese could readily be made and preserved, while in Italy, Spain and other portions of Southern Europe, they are not even now largely produced. As a substitute, the people of those countries have always been accustomed to the liberal use of good oil, both for cook ing purposes and for the table. In the south of France butter is sold in the apothecaries' shops for medicinal purposes, and one of the grievances recounted by travelers in Spain is Italy that they can seldom meet with butter. In warm countries it is difficult to preserve it for any length of time, and it appears certain that the only butter the ancient nations possessed liquid. The Arabs are required to be the greatest consumers of butter trations in the world. A cup full of melted butter is an ordinary morning drink among all classes. Buckhardt, the petite for it is universal, and the poorest persons will spend half their in the second paragraph of article first have butter at every meal.
