JIG-A-MA-RIG.

Jig-a-ma-rig was a parrot sly.

And lived with Kitty McGee. And Kitty McGee was a queer old hag. As you shall shortly sec.

Kitty was rich and stingy too, But she turned him away with a "get you And she always said the same.

And Jig-a-ma-rig he said it too, And said it so very plain That visitors thought it was Kitty's voice, And never came back again.

Alas! poor Kitty, she broke her leg, In her cellar, dark and deep, And faintly she cried for human aid And many a day did weep.

Whose hand could set her bones.

The "get you gone" of Jig-a-ma-rig

Was heard above her groans. And when her body was wearied out, And death itself occurred, The "get you gone" of Jig-a-ma-rig Was all the prayer she heard.

A CALCULATING MACHINE.

II. B. Martin of San Francisco, a civil engineer of rare inventive faculties, has produced a calculating machine which eclipses anything of the kind ever heard of before. The machine may be described generally as height.
