From Forney's Philadelphia Press.

A writer in Chambers' Journal says that fruit should be eaten alive, like oysters. There is an edge to the taste of a fresh opened oyster, which, I suppose, comes. from the surprise he feels at being suddenly scooped from the shell. In a few minutes this gives place to a feeling of alarm; and then in an hour or two, to one of despair. When he is laid out with his brethren in a dish, the whole brood is hopeless and sad. They may still taste of life, but from disease, as well as from attacks of it is of life disappointed. But the freshly opened oyster has no time to grow feverish or melancholy. He is caught in a state of ent of the Atta gives this as a cure for serene unconsciousness of sorrow. I of healthful powers, he conveys all the gratification an oyster is capable of giving very nearly so, in two to four days at the to the superior animal-man.

So, analogously, I believe, it is in eating fruit. It must be eaten alive-before the reaction begins to set in from its severance from the life-carrying stem. While a plum, for example, hangs upon its stock, it is in some kind of magnetic correspondence with all the powers of nature; it shares the life of the earth and the sky; it has sunshine in its veins, and dew in its cells. Cut it off, and in time it dies, corrupt, unwholesome; and every movement in its progress fron life to death is marked by a fruit delicious. Therefore, supposing that you plack it ripe, the sooner a plum is eaten, the better for you. This of course applies most to tender, thin-skinned fruit.

I think the morning is the best time for fruit. I am not quite sure, though. The afternoon is good. Would it be possible for any cunning fellow gathered himself up. magician in words to convey a sense of the flavor of various fruits? I think not. When I try, the difficulty is radical and specific; it does not lie in my impotence of language. It is merely a small and faint effort to describe the current as sharp; the nectarine, clean, quick and juicy; the peach, mellow, melting and high-hred; the apple, sound and masculine; the pear, subtle and yet firm; the grape, generous; the 'strawberry, tender, yet distinct and fragrant; the gooseherry, vulgar yet pleasant; the raspberry, sweet; the cherry, fleeting and pulpy. It is of no lies in the inadequacy of language to define the sensation which shall be appropriate to the flavor of fruit, and yet convey the peculiar property of the several sorts. I will not attempt a definition of them. But I protest against the coarseceive, in eating, that it is brought into contact with the subtlest and most distinetive difference which can characterize anything which, like fruit, is known under one
