duces us to think Vaughn was right in perpetrating the horrible butchery referrof the summoning officers.

Again, in speaking of a former article in the Statesman on this trial, that paper

The article was written as a vindication of justice, and as an answer to the weak reply of the Enterprise we will add, that many parties there predicted the result days beforehand, judging from the plain management of the case, and the conduct of the Sheriff. We have no acquaintance with that gentleman, and are willing to owner in the Ederprise, we fully understand and appreciate the necessity for the Enterprise to shield him from public indig-interest which Mr. Myers has in the ENTER-PRISE. We are aware that money is the siderable damage. god which Republican politicians worship. are not surprised that the editor of the Statesman erroneously measures us by his own standard. But we have no time to waste in replying to such matters, and will therefore discard them, and call attention to the main question-that is: the influence that a "Democratic Sheriff" had in the formation of the jury which tried Frank Vaugha.

That eight of the jurymen were selected from the regular panel, and that only four were taken from the additional jurors summoned by the Sheriff, are facts, and are admitted to be such by the Statesman. These four jurors, selected by the Sheriff. must have exerted a powerful influence. if they subjugated and controlled the eight men taken from the regular panel. We will now state the manner of selecting the regular panel, and in doing so we will be particular, for thereby hangs a tale. The panel is selected in this manner: The County Court of each county, at its first term of each year, or in case of omission or neglect to do so, then at any future term, makes from the last assessment roll of the county, a list denominated the jury list, containing the names of persons to serve as grand and trial jurors until the following year, or until new lists be made. This list contains the names of one hundred men, and the law requires that it of the county, in proportion to the numther of qualified persons on the assessment

The County Clerk is required to keep in his office a sufficient box, and to prepare and deposit therein, (after the jury list is made,) one hundred separate ballots, each ballot containing the name, place of residence, and occupation of a person emto so fold the ballots that the names can-

Not less than ten nor more than twenty Court, thirty-one names are drawn from the ensuing term. The drawing takes to his assistance the Sheriff, or a Justice of the Peace of the county, and proceed with the drawing as follows: The Clerk shall shake the box containing the ballots so as to mingle them as much as possible, and then publicly draw out of the box.one at a time, the required thirty-one ballots, and these ballots contain the names of the nersons who are to serve as grand and trial jurors at the ensuing term. These persons are summoned by the Sheriff, and on the first day of the Court, the jurors summoned being in attendance, these same charge of murder, were released on last thirty-one ballots are put into another Friday. The Grand Jury failed to obtain box, from which the Clerk draws seven evidence sufficient to warrant the finding ballots, and the persons whose names are of an indictment. - Blade,

Our County Court being composed of two Republicans and one Democrat, it is not improbable that the jury lists formed by such Court were two-thirds Republican at least, and one-third Democratic, in their sentiments. At all events, the panel drawn for the last March term of the Circuit Court stood politically twenty Republican and eleven Democratic, and from this list the Clerk drew seven Republicans for grand jurymen.
