"S. C., Jr." sends the following

New York Ledger: One day a gentleman from New Bedford waited upon Mr. Webster, in his office on Court street, wishing to engage him for the defense in an important case at law. The visitor was himself the defendant, and the amount at stake in the suit was from sixty to seventy thousand dollars. He presented all of the important points, and Mr. Webster was willing to undertake the task. But the client could not tell exactly when the case would come on.

"Very well," said Mr. Webster, "if you wish to retain me for the North to conceive the harassments which the best Hotel in Portland. "And now, sir," said Daniel, after he had put the check in his pocket, "I will give you a bit of advice, gratis. If you can compromise this business upon fair terms with the plaintiff, you had better do so.'

The client acknowledged his thanks, and then took his leave.-Daniel sent the check to the bank, where it was duly honored.

On the very next day the gentleman from New Bedford called upon Mr. Webster again. The plaintiff was in Boston-had come up on the previous day on purpose to compromise-and a compromise had been effected.

"In short," said the client, "we have made a fair and satisfactory settlement."

Mr. Webster was very glad; and having so expressed himself, and duly congratulated his visitor, he would have turned to other business, but the visitor seemed to have something further on his mindand uneasy.

"Of course," he ventured, after services, Mr. Webster." "Certainly not, sir."
