

AMO.

When he told me that he loved me,
'Twas the flowery time of May;
I put roses in my ringlets,
And went singing all the day—
When he told me that he loved me,
In the pleasant month of May!

Still he told me that he loved me
In the summer time of June;
When the roses blushed the redder,
And the birds were all in tune—
And I blushed (because he loved me)
Redder than the rose of June!

Yes! because I knew he loved me,
I went singing with the birds,
All the day I listened to him—
All the night I heard his words,
Dreaming nightly that he loved me,
I was blither than the birds!

But I didn't know that I loved him!
Till I found one summer's day,
That, in saying how he loved me,
He had wiled my heart away—
Only saying how he loved me
Through the long, bright summer day.

Still, he told me that he loved me,
When the roses fading fell;
And the birds had all forgotten
The sweet tune I've learned so well—
For I love him, and he loves me,
More than any words can tell!

STATISTICS OF OREGON.

BY A. J. DUFUR.

NO. 13.
GRANT COUNTY.

This county, situated in the interior of the State, and of which, comparatively speaking, so little is known, is not without its mineral and agricultural wealth of the State of Oregon, making it one of the few localities in the whole world where unsurpassed mineral wealth is so generously blended with a healthful climate and fertile soil.

The latitude of this county gives it a climate justly celebrated for imparting health and vigor to the invalid, and especially to the consumptive.

The grandeur of its mountain scenery, interspersed with numerous valleys of unsurpassed loveliness and fertility, with here and there an extensive plain of table land, dotted with small lakes of pure cold water sparkling in the summer sunbeams, when viewed from the summit of some of its lofty mountains, produces strange contrast with dreary wastes covered with volcanic debris, and dressed in the sombre hues of sagebrush gray.

This county is bounded on the north by Umatilla county, east by Union and Baker counties, south by the state of Nevada, west by Wasco and Jackson counties, and covers an area of over 10,000,000 acres. In the northeastern and eastern portions of this county, the face of the country is rough and mountainous, being broken by detached peaks of the Blue Mountains. In the central and western part of the county, taking its slope northwest toward the Columbia river, are numerous small valleys of unsurpassed fertility, along the North fork, South fork, and Middle fork, of the John Day's river and their tributaries. These valleys produce the different varieties of small grain in abundance, and are particularly well adapted to the growth of wheat. Vegetables of all kinds do exceedingly well in these valleys where they have been cultivated. Melons, Indian corn, and the different varieties of small fruit can be successfully cultivated in these valleys, the climate being warmer and drier in summer than in the Willamette valley or in localities nearer the Pacific coast. The apple, pear and plum grow very thrifty where proper care is bestowed; but the trees are young and only in a few instances have been brought into bearing.

The hills and table lands of this part of the county are covered with very nutritious grass, called bunch grass, affording an almost inexhaustible supply of pasturage and grazing land. From the central part, the county seems to take a gradual slope toward the southwest till you reach the southern boundary of the State. The face of the country as far as explored in this locality, although in many places broken and mountainous, has extensive prairies or table land covered with grass, and run in a westerly direction, a distance of more than one hundred miles. These table lands, or prairies, are traversed their entire length by a chain of small lakes connected by channels of fresh water, commencing in the middle and eastern portion of the county and running southwest to Humboldt county, in the State of Nevada. The valley of these lakes, although between one and two hundred miles in length, seems to be an off-shoot of the great Klamath Lake Valley, in the eastern portion of Jackson county, and is supposed to form a continuous connection with Klamath Lake Valley, Sprague's River Valley, and the great valleys of the Humboldt Basin in Nevada. These lakes are of pure fresh water, and abundantly supplied with fish, among which are the black bass, mountain trout. The names of the lakes commencing in the southwest and running to northeast part of the county, are Grass Lake, Antelope, Christmas, Trout, Malheur, Basin, North and Middle Lakes. In the central and western part of the county are the Gold Lake and Crooked Rivers, but they are not connected with the before mentioned chain of lakes.

The valleys, prairies and table lands in this portion of the county have the appearance of being well adapted to a system of general husbandry, and especially to stock-raising, and are capable of supporting a population of many thousand inhabitants. But the Indians are troublesome in almost all parts of the county, and many localities can only be approached by the determined miner in search of the hidden treasures of the mountains, or by military force, opening the way for settlement to the hardy pioneer.

In this country the summers are short, hot and dry; the springs and falls are long, pleasant and cold; the snows fall to a great depth in the mountains, while in the valleys that are settled, stock of all kinds will winter in good condition without grain or hay. The climate among the hills and valleys of this country is unusually healthy. A few months' sojourn among their wilds generally proves very beneficial to those afflicted with disease of the lungs; while in some instances the consumptive, at old appearance past medical aid, has received permanent relief by a year's residence in those mountains. The different varieties of timber known to Oregon, and previously noted in descriptions of other portions of the State, are sufficient distributed through this county to answer all practical purposes for farming and mechanical use, whenever the immense mineral wealth of her mountains, the stock capacity of her hills, table lands and prairies, and the agricultural resources of her valleys are brought under the control of civilization.

The Oregon Central Military Road, designed to connect the head of the Willamette Valley with the great basin of the Klamath Lake, Humboldt and Salt Lake Valleys, passes through the southern portion of this county. The rapid approach of the Union Pacific Railroad from the east, and the Central Pacific from the west, towards these great valleys, speaks in unmistakable language the doom of those wild savages and barbarous tribes that now check the spread of civilization into this portion of country. And although the graphic description by Longfellow of "Hiawatha," "Old Kanomis," and "Mimichaha," may awake feelings of commiseration in the minds of the dreamy poet and parlor philanthropist for the sad fate of the poor Indians, the inevitable result of the great laws will be, that

"Soon on those banks so gay and green,
Will numerous herds and flocks be seen;
And lasses, chanting o'er the mill,
And shepherds, piping in the dale,
And industry, that knows no guile,
And hearts resolved, and hands prepared,
The blessings they enjoy to guard."

The mineral resources of this locality are too extensive to allow of a description in detail in this work. The face of the country gives unmistakable evidence of recent volcanic action, and mineral indications are apparent to the skillful miner in various parts of the country. Gold in placer diggings and in rich quartz lodes is being worked in a number of mining camps along the John Day's river and its tributaries; and although mining has been rendered dangerous by the reason of the hostility of the savage bands of the Snake Indians, still it is estimated by persons competent to judge that the various mining camps of this county have produced over $10,000,000 in gold within the last six years.

Good silver lodes exist in this county, also the croppings of lead, coal, copper and iron; but these last minerals have not yet been developed to any extent.

This county has an assessable property of about $350,000, and a population of about 4,000 inhabitants. Canyon City, the county seat, is a thriving town of considerable importance, situated on the John Day's river, has a post office, schools, religious worship good society. The professions are as ably represented in proportion to the number of inhabitants, as any other portion of the State. A flourishing grist mill, two or three lumber mills, and stores sufficient to supply all the necessities of a new settlement, are established in this county. A number of good farms have been opened and are being successfully worked, about nine thousand acres of land being under cultivation. The settled portions of this county may be approached from the north by a good wagon road from the Dalles, on the Columbia river at which point the enterprise of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company has furnished connection by steamboats with all the navigable waters of this State. A mail route is established between tween Canyon City and the Dalles, supplied with coaches and good means of conveyance for passengers. There are wagon roads and pack trails to the various mining camps leading through portions of the county.

Oregon Wool and its Fabrics.
From the Salem Daily Press.

Oregonians have boasted of the superiority of Oregon wool and the fabrics manufactured by our mills, without, in many instances, showing wherein the superiority exists; yet, we think the claim is not an idle one. The market prices paid for different wools, is a very good index of quality, and that argument is entirely in our favor. Last year, when California wool was quoted at 18 and 19 cents, buyers were paying 22 and even 23 cents for wool in the Willamette Valley. But there are other reasons than this to be adduced. Climate has its effect. The temperature of the Pacific coast is so equal, and west of the Cascades, moist that the growth of the wool each year on the sheep's back is unchecked, and the staple is long and of an even texture. During the cold winter months, the growth is stunted and the flow of the oily substance necessary to complete the work of nature, is stopped. In the Spring the healthy growth is continued, thus causing a weak part in the fiber. In California the same thing occurs, only it is caused by the long dry and hot summer. Wool of this grade, when being combed out by the carding machines, breaks at the weak spot and the short ends fly off, causing great loss. Wool grown in alkali countries is even worse than that just mentioned, for the alkali uniting with the fatty substance of the wool makes a new compound which is scoured away, leaving the wool fibers harsh and brittle. It has been found that in scouring, California wool and that from east of the mountains, loses from 60 to 65 per cent, while Willamette wool will wash away only about 40 per cent. It follows that goods made from our wool wear much better than when other stock is used. With such advantages in favor of our State it is evident that no more profitable branch of farming can engage the attention of our stock raisers.

Schooner Wrecked.

The Herald's regular Astoria tri-weekly correspondent, Feb. 4, says: The schooner Ellen, which crossed the bar on last Sunday Jan. 30th, for Shoalwater Bay, ran on to an island in Shoalwater Bay known as snag Island. The particulars of this accident are as follows: The Ellen in crossing the Columbia River bar shipped a heavy sea, which knocked one of her hands overboard, but fortunately he held on to a rope, and by means of it got aboard again. He had three of his ribs broken by this accident, which almost disabled him for the balance of the trip. There was one more hand aboard besides the captain. These two were not sufficient to manage her, as the wind was blowing a perfect gale. The captain had to stand at the wheel, and this left but one man to manage the sails and bring the schooner "about" when required. After crossing Shoalwater Bay bar, the wind still blowing a gale, and darkness and fog having obscured the land, the schooner kept on her course in order to reach smooth water and to get clear of the gale, which the Captain presumed would continue for some time, but when he had gone two or three miles, and was endeavoring to "come about," she struck bottom. Her crew and cargo are all safe. The Ellen may still be saved, but she is badly "stove up." The Ellen was owned by Captains Flavel and Crosby, and had been in these waters for many years.

In Europe small looking glasses are worn in the collars of some fine carriage horses for ornament.

An exchange says there are 200,000 threshing machines in the United States, besides the school marms and the old folks at home.

A sprightly little girl being asked "What is nothing?" replied: "Shut your eyes, and you will see it?"

The Spaniards say: "a woman's counsel is no great thing, but he is a fool who does not take it."

"Pap," observed a young urchin of tender years to his fond parent, "does the Lord know everything?" "Yes, my son, replied the hopeful parent, "but why do you ask?" "Because our preacher, when he prays, is so long telling him everything, I thought he wasn't posted!" The parent reflected.
