For the Enterprise. SPRING.

From a fairy home, in a clime unknown. On the wings of a zephyr borne, A beautiful maid came wandering down To our earth so cold and forlorn. PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY King Winter long had usurped the throne.

And a cold, hard monarch was he,

And his winds disturbed the sea: And the proud green fields wore Rnin's gray crown,

And the rivers grew pale as death.

Approached him with simple grace. That o'erlooked her realm below. The sighing tree-tops to and fro.

peeped up

In beauty, clad with perfume rare, The golden Crocus and pale butter cup With the meek eved Violet fair.

In praise of Nature's household neat. She spoke, and the zephyr's came laugh-Kissing each flower and glad green tree.

Dispelling dark clouds from an angry sky And filling the earth with thankful glee. Thus scattering blessings and sunshine bright The maid in our midst remained, But her eye grew dim, and her step less light. E're three short months she had reigned But a few days more, and one star-lit

She gathered her treasures fair, And laying them down at Summer's feet The sweet Spring vanished in air.
