Reward of Waiting.

BY WILLIE E. PABOR.

If patience brings upon its wings The blessed balm of healing, And soothes the soul when o'er it roll The resiless waves of leeling. Oh! at this hour I need its power To check the fever spinning.

With freshened force along its course,

If one could find contented mind. All ready for the asking, If one could feel for wo or weal That faces need no masking. We'd not let slip between the lip The words there's no recalling,

We'd only ask consent to bask

My soul to passion winning.

Where peace is ever failing. If there's a shrine where heart of min-Can find the needed treasure, O may I win the blessing in

Its purest, amplest measure; My wrestless thought by patience taught Shall then, its zeal abating. Lie on the breast of perfect rest.

And win REWARD OF WAITING. ----The German's Native Land.

Know ye the land where, tall and green, The ancient forest oaks are seen? Through vineyards gleaming in the sun? We know the lovely land full well; 'Tis where the free-souled Germans dwell

Know ye the land where truth is told; Where word of man is good as gold? The honest land, where love and truth Bloom on in everlasting youth. We know that honest land full well; 'Tis where the free-souled Germans dwell.

Know ye the land where each vile song Is banished from the jovial throng? The sacred land, where, free from art, Religion sways the simple heart? We know that sacred land fall well: Tis where the free-souled Gormans dwell.
