Is your land richer; the average the said corporation the actual product greater; is it less weedy; smoother on the surface; better fenced, and supplied with more If not, your system of farming is > unprofftable. Perhaps you have made a great deal of money, and have invested it in bank stock, oil stock, or United States Bonds; and you think this accumulation an evidence of prosperity. But deduct a fair compensation for your labor and has not the remainder been taken from the intrinsic value of your land? If you sell the products of the farm now for the same prices they brought ten years ago, and incur the same expenses you did then, will your income be as large? If the conclusion is forced upon you that the farm will not produce as abundantly as in former times, then you must own that the land has been robbed of this surplus money, and that it is not legitimate profit.
