'There is no War After Death.'

Such was the magnanimous reply of the Prussian Ambassador to an invitation to attend the funeral of the French diplomatic representative in Washington yes- NERVOUS & DEBILITATED terday. The sentiment was worthy of a great soul, and we honor the man that uttered it. God grant that the inspiration may strike home in some of the baser American hearts about Washington which delighted in pursuing the dead and heaping indignation on their graves. We commend it especially to the savage head of the Army of the Republic, and bid him learn from this stranger of a foreign land now engaged in deadly strife, the sentiments and customs of a civilized age. Baron Gerolt's humanity can drop a sprig upon the grave of his country's enemy in the midst of war; yet,
