SUPREME COURT CASES DECREASE

Not as Many Filed During Year Just Closed as During 1916

A resume of the proceedings of the Oregon supreme court is made in a statement prepared by Clerk J. C. Moreland yesterday. Comparative figures show that more cases were filed in the court during 1916 than during 1917, the totals being 392 and 332 repsectively, a difference of ninety cases.

The number of written opinions for 1916 was 356 and for 1917 390.

Of the 332 cases filed in the court for the year just closed 293 were filed at Salem and thirty-nine at Pendleton where the eastern Oregon session of the court is held twice each year.

By written opinions 318 cases have been disposed of during the last year and by stipulation 32, a total of 350.

Of the 390 written opinions for the year 312 were on merits, sixty-six on motions, nine were dissenting opinions and three special concurring opinions. The average number of written opinions for each of the seven justices was fifty-five.

The number of cases affirmed during the year was 142, the number reversed 129 and the number modified twenty-nine. Original proceedings filed in the court were twelve of which five were allowed and seven denied.

Total cash receipts in the court was $13,028.10. Of this amount $10,898.10 was in filing fees and $2130 for admission of attorneys.

An even 100 attorneys were admitted by the court to the practice of law in Oregon, twelve from other states and eighty-eight admitted on examination.

ADVERTISE MORE MARTIN'S PLEA

Salem Lawyer Finds Local products More Appreciated in Seattle

Attorney Ivan G. Martin was just coming out of his office last night in the Masonic block and had reached the elevator when he turned back, with a sort of tired look, as his wife went on down the elevator on her way home and to dinner.

But when Mr. Martin looks all tired out he sometimes is not, and when asked if he had a good time on his vacation in Seattle, he was at once wide awake and enthusiastic.

"Seattle is some time," he said, but believe me or not, for I am ashamed to tell it on myself. When I finally got out to visit my friends they had for dessert evaporated apricots put up by the Salem-Kings Products company, and instead of claret for dinner the host set out a bottle of 'Loju,' another Salem made product.

"We are not advertised, that seems to be the trouble, here in Salem, at least. These are both home made products, and Salem ought to know about how good they are.

Sees Wonderful Panorama.

"My friends took me up on top of the highest building in Seattle, forty-two stories it was, straight up in to the sky. The day was wonderfully clear—the only clear day while I was there, I think, and from its top I could see Mt. Baker and Mt. Tacoma, and the entire country spread out like a big map.

"I paid a visit to Camp Lewis while I was in Seattle, and there I met Dr. Pound, well known here, and many others from Salem were there also. I also met Isadore Brick, another Salem man, who is now in the wholesale diamond business in Seattle, and making money.

"Willis Chamberlain is now with Terrill & Stratton, attorneys, and he now tells me that he has a little boy. He married Olive Metcalf, a Salem girl.

"My train got into Seattle Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, instead of 10:45 the night before, and I went up to the hotel where I found nearly fifty people sleeping in chairs. What do you think of that?

"The clerk of the St. Regis hotel told me they had turned away about 100 that night. I happened to find a friend stopping there and bunked in with him, or might have had to walk the streets all night."

Manager Bligh Gives Salem Another Real Good Show

"Fair and Warmer" was a scream last night at the Grand Opera house, although it only played to a fair sized audience. It was given by the same company recently presented in Portland and was a first class show. There were lots of pretty costumes and the dialogue got a laugh whenever it was wanted.

The play, presented by Selwyn & Co., was written by Avery Hopwood, author of "Seven Days" and "Nobody's Widow." It was full of funny situations and its plot of "What Happened First" and "What Happened Next" and, "Then What Happened," was worth sitting through.

"Don't be good to her, be a husband to her," was the advice given to the neglected husband in the play. Just how the husband won out had to be acted out and Henry Stockbridge as "Billy Bartlett" was a "bear" in the acting. There were only eight members in the cast and each one was in the right place, apparently, as the audience gave every evidence of believing so. The final act was the cure-all" for the jealousy concocted in the play, which, when it was exposed was found to be nothing at all.
