ANOTHER FLOOD IS THREATENED

Sudden Rise of Water Makes Entrance to Some Houses Impossible

That the "Emperor of the Mar-mots" more than made good his threats against suffering humanity was evidence yesterday by another rainfall of .60 of an inch, and a rise in the river to 17.3 feet with a telegram from Portland stating that it would reach the 20 foot mark before 9 o'clock this morning.

The steamer Pomona was sent up the river yesterday morning for a cargo of wheat to Harrisburg fifteen miles south of Corvallis, but it was doubtful if the boat can get through the locks at Oregon City on her return trip or any down boat can get to Salem today.

Agent C. C. Graham left for Portland yesterday afternoon to look into the situation in the metropolis, and see what business may be arranged for future delivery.

In the Yew Park district, early yesterday morning, there seemed to have been a sort of cloud burst, which flooded the streets in all directions, rendering it impossible to get into some houses.

In the afternoon the water had drained off and in all the ditches or small ravines in the neighborhood, swift currents of muddy water were hurrying through.

Harvey Wells May Quit as Insurance Official

Rumor is current that Harvey Wells, state insurance commissioner, has been offered a highly lucrative position with a San Francisco insurance concern and that he may resign his state position to accept it. If he resigns it is a question whether he will do so before the primary election.

Mr. Wells is now in San Francisco, in his mission to make final arrangements for taking the position. He has been made previous offers by insurance companies.

The rumor has caused speculation as to who might succeed Wells as insurance commissioner. The names of John H. Burgard and Herman C. Von Borstel of Portland are mentioned.

GRIM HAVOC OF WAR NOW BEFORE NATION

(Continued from page 1) some were smashed by the explosion, and with many men aboard who had never been on the ocean before, there were all the possibilities of a general panic and wholesale drownings. As it was many were rescued from the sea from wave-washed rafts, some even swimming supported by timbers and their sufferings were intense. A number succumbed after being taken aboard the rescue boats; others after they had been brought ashore.

Rescue Work Speedy. The rescue work appears to have been carried out with great promptness and efficiency. Destroyers were first on the scene, picking up boats and rafts, and soon afterwards, by wireless signals, smaller craft were summoned from harbors along the whole coast, and they searched the waters regardless of the danger from submarines. All possible care was given the survivors when brought ashore at three Irish ports. Hotels and hospitals were at their disposal, with doctors and nurses and food and clothing were ready for them.

The chief personal interest in Glasgow and the Irish ports attaches to the fate of the ship's officers and crew. While the names of the saved and lost are still unknown, a large contingent of the ship's company crossed to England on the first boat, ready, as usual, to ship again for any service for which they might be enrolled.

John Newton Hall of Los Angeles, first lieutenant of engineers, was sitting on a lounge reading a book on "No Man's Land" which he was about to visit, when the torpedo struck. He knew what had happened and shouted the word "torpedo" across the room. With several others he hurried to the lifeboat station on the boat deck.

Trawler Rescues Men. "There stood several privates at attention," he said, "awaiting my orders to launch the boats. In less time than it takes to tell they were joined by the requisite number. It was surprising to see how these new soldier carried out their duties like veterans.

"We got the first boat down to the saloon deck, where it was promptly filled with soldiers and was lowered into the water without mishap. The second boat, however, was being lowered when the wind carried it on to another lifeboat, crushing it and several of the occupants. We then launched three more without further trouble."

After seeing the men reach the water safely, Lieutenant Hall let himself down by a rope. Lieutenant Wallace Patterson of Cleveland followed him down the rope, and much to their surprise they fell into the sea put launch the boat. The boat was loaded to the water line with sixty-five men, who took turns at the oars for three hours until they were rescued by a trawler.

Relief Work in Action. LONDON, Feb. 7.—News of the sinking of the Tuscania reached the American military authorities here Wednesday morning. Additional machinery for relief work immediately was put in motion and several score officials of the American army and navy left here during the day for Ireland. Vice-Admiral William Sims, commander of the American destroyer squadron in European waters, who now is in Rome for a few days, was notified by telegram of the disaster.

The night boat train, which goes direct to the port where the majority of the survivors was landed, was crowded to overflowing. The passengers included many American Red Cross workers, representatives of the Y. M. C. A., and a large number of military and naval men. A correspondent of the Associated Press, traveling on this train, found every seat taken a half hour before leaving time and a number of passengers standing in the aisles for the all-night trip.

Belfast Has Sympathy. BELFAST, Feb. 7.—Immediately after news of the disaster to the Tuscania was received here steps were taken to provide for the survivors. A large amount of clothing and other necessities were dispatched to the nearby port of rescue, preparations were made to house those who might be brought to Belfast and an offer was made to supply any needs required for the comfort or aid of the men. The lord mayor sent the following message to Walter Hines Page, the American ambassador at London.

"On behalf of the citizens of Belfast, I offer to the United States my deepest sympathy in this fresh outrage to which American subjects and shipping have been subjected near here. I respectfully and earnestly offer all necessary help, and I am in contact with the survivors at this moment."

Ambassador Page replied: "I beg your lordship to accept this expression of my deep appreciation of the feelings conveyed in your telegram, which has just reached me. The sympathy and help which you and the people so generously extend and which my countrymen will join me in receiving with liveliest gratitude, is still another evidence, not only of your national warm-heartedness, but the strength of our brotherhood in arms."

Telegrams of sympathy also were sent to the American ambassador by the Rev. Irwin, moderator of the Irish Presbyterian church, and Bishop C. S. Darcy of Down.

GLASGOW, Feb. 7.—Nearly all the members of the crew of the Tuscania hailed from Glasgow, and when it became known that she had been sunk the officers of the Anchor line were besieged by anxious relatives. The officials at first were unable to give much information regarding the survivors but during the course of the day a number of those saved arrived here. Other survivors are expected to reach this city tomorrow.
