"There is one, right down this street, till you come to that striped pole" he said, and with "Thank you," the little miss went her way.

Half an hour later the young man happened to be coing the street in an opposite direction, and met the girl again. Her hair was nicely bobbed and she skipped along unmideful of all. When she saw her late informant, however, she stopped, and, as he was eating some peanuts, said. "Give me some," accompanying the request with a winning smile. Out came the sack and quickly changed hands. The young man was rewarded with another "Thank you."

"Did you find the barber shop?" he asked. "You bet," was the answer, and homeward she went.
