Conduct Red Cross Drives Among Eskimo Settlements

"Imbued with a win-the-war spirit equal to that of their white sisters, Eskimo women have become enthusiastic Red Cross workers, and 'drives' for funds are conducted with great zeal and alacrity," states William T. Lopp, chief of the Alaska division of the United States bureau of education, who has just returned to Washington from the northwest.

"The Eskimos' contributions represent real sacrifice," continued Mr. Lopp. "One village, which had been saving up for several years for the purchase of a much-needed sawmill and had accumulated $130, donated $100 of its scanty hoard, and then procured further contributions amounting to $38. Donations of 50 cents apiece by the children of the village school brought the total up to $159. How did they get the money? By selling furs, cutting ivory, and longshoring for the ships that visited their isolated home.

"Indian villages have collected as much as $400 for the Red Cross. Hoonah, Metlakatla, Kake, Hydaburg, Klawock and Klukwan have each raised between $150 and $400. The native women have proven proficient in Red Cross classes; home nursing, surgical dressings, and knitting they have done extremely well. There is no hyphen in the Indian's Americanism.

"Teachers in the Alaskan schools have done yeoman service in organizing the school children into junior auxiliaries and the women into Red Cross chapters. Miss Isabel Gilman, teacher of the school at Juneau, has been especially successful; her classes have done remarkable work."
