"Vegetables are from 70 to 90 per cent water. Dehydration is a simple process, which removes the water and leaves the food. The vegetables are reduced to a small portion of their original bulk; are easy to pack, ship and keep. The saving in transportation space and charges is enormous. . The water is put back into the vegetables in the consumer's own kitchen by soaking. "This is a thoroughly practical proposition. It will increase the food supply, and furthermore, it will help to lower the cost of living, because the price per pound of food in dehydrated vegetables is lower than in canned vegetables. "In the food crisis which we now face in common with world we must exert every effort to lessen our use of certain of our staple foods. If for part of our cereal, meat and sugar foods we can have an abundant, inexpensive supply of vegetables and fruit on which to draw we shall then have sufficient foodstuffs to provide old and young with the nourishment required for health and strength, while the surplus of our staples is made available for those who need it more than we do-the allied peoples and our own

boys abroad." SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHER
