WAR SUMMARY

While the Italians have been busily engaged in cleaning up the Piave battle front, gathering together the spoils of war and making straggling Austrians prisoner, the American troops stationed in the Belleau wood northwest of Chateau Thierry have been devoting their time to showing the Germans again the fighting timber of which they are made.

CAMP LEWIS NOTES

CAMP LEWIS, TACOMA, Wash., June 26.—With the arrival of 2255 men today, approximately 5000 of the June draft contingent of 12,000 men had arrived in camp. The last of today's arrivals were in early tonight and the sleeping station personnel were given a rest, no more men being scheduled for arrival before 6 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Second Lieutenant Christopher S. Reidy of San Francisco, officer in charge of the receiving station where the new draft arrivals were received, today is first lieutenant, his promotion coming today. He served nine years in the ranks of the regular army on the Mexican border.

BROOKS PLANS FISHING TRIP

Salem Sergeant Soon to Take First Leave Since Arriving in France.

Sergeant Russell M. Brooks is already planning a fishing trip to take place after the war. He is to have leave soon, but expects to utilize a part of it for a minor surgical operation.

In a recent letter he writes to his mother, Mrs. Mildred Robertson Brooks: "Business as usual is the motto of the French and the industrial life of the nation must not be kept back by any war, for that will be needed afterwards.

Just finished eating dinner, baked brown beans and onions baked in them, garnished with strips of bacon, oleomargarine, bread, coffee, and pudding, all good. Walked home in a hoisty rain that hit the puddles in the grevices of the cobblestoned streets and splashed all over my leather puttees.

Don't feel very good today; this damp weather gets my throat. Am going to have my tonsils removed on my first leave, which will be ready soon now, for we are entitled to take it after four months from leaving the United States.

Notes of Interest from O. A. C.

A series of ups-and-downs is observed in the progress of the potato industry of the country, by Prof. G. R. Hyslop, head of farm crops of the Oregon Experiment Station.

"Usually a large yield is associated with low prices, followed by smaller plantings resulting in smaller crops and higher prices," he says. "This encourages the growers to take another plunge in potatoes, and the excess plantings especially in good years produce an enormous oversupply and accompanying low prices.

This year according to precedent will be a year of small planting in Oregon. Travels and observations in many sections indicate that the planting will be small. There is still time to plant some of the seed potatoes that are left and to make the planting cheaply because seed can be easily secured.

No other grain crop for late planting in Oregon is quite equal to buckwheat, the Oregon Agricultural College Station has found by repeated trials on the college farm.

"Vetch fields, harvested for silage or destroyed by aphid may be disked up thoroughly, or in some cases plowed and worked to a seed bed for the crop.

"Buckwheat sowed at thirty-five to forty pounds per acre as early as possible in June will give a good return of wheat substitutes or stock feed. It is a good feed for poultry and other kinds of livestock when in mixture with other grain.

Oregon has never been a large producer of buckwheat, but all indications are that every pound of buckwheat that may be produced will be valuable and will help to carry human beings and livestock through the coming winter.

Death camas is the least known of the stock-poisoning plants, and because sheep are very susceptible to it the losses are sometimes very heavy in Oregon. And this is the time of year when it is most deadly.

"All parts of the plant are poisonous, especially the flowers and seed," says Prof. W. E. Lawrence, of O. A. C. "Lambs are more susceptible than sheep. Experiments seem to show that for all parts of the plant except the seed the toxic dose is not far from one-half pound to every hundred pounds of live weight of the animal.

"The plant is found in Eastern and Western Oregon, ranging from low to high altitudes. It grows in moist but not wet places, though these places may dry out during the summer after the plants die.

"Although known to surprisingly few stockmen death camas is easily recognized at flowering time by its creamy-white cluster of small flowers. It has an onion-like bulb, usually covered with a black membrane, by which it may be recognized after drying up, during which time it is still poisonous.
