THE

BRUNSWICK PHONOGRAPH

ON THE Brunswick the Music from any record is more exquisitely expressed. Tones heretofore hidden are now brought out by the wooden-walled tone chamber—built like a violin. You gain all the previously lost overtones, mellow low notes, the clear vibrant, high C, and all delicate shadings. Metallic sounds are impossible because there is no metal in The Brunswick tone chamber.

Phonograph owners have found before that some of the greatest records in the world (Pathe's, for instance) were barred from their homes. The Brunswick's adaptability removes all limitations. It is designed to play—BETTER—all records of all makes.

The Brunswick-Balke Collender Co. has been famous for generations for its woodworking experts. It has been making the finest phonograph cabinets for years. All this skill, this "know how" and this experience go into the making of the Brunswick.

Make us, by comparison, prove the All-record Brunswick superior.

OVER THE TOP.

"Over the top with the best o' luck,"
Naught do they know of fear,
Dauntless Courage and bulldog pluck,
Though death awaits them in the muck,
They charge it with a cheer.

Over the top with joke and grin,
Into the jaws of hell,
Into the fray with will to win,
Undaunted by the battle's din,
They give the Yankee yell.

Over the top for righteous cause,
To set the whole world free,
To wrench it from a tyrant's claws
Establish Justice and its laws,
They fight for Liberty.

Over the top at Freedom's call,
A call for sacrifice,
Not they, alone, who fight and fall—
It calls to you, to me, to all,
We, too, must pay the price.

—George H. Tomlinson.

In the land army recruited by the New York state food commission now at work on the farms are 2000 men and women from New York city and 1000 from other cities in the state. Many of these women are accomplishing the full day's work of a man. They drive tractors, planters, cultivators, harrows and plows, sort small fruits, do weeding and are efficient in all the simpler forms of farm work. Later they will help in the hay and grain fields and dig potatoes. College girls are found to be especially ready and willing. The call for feminine help increases with the season's need. The workers are looked after with method and take pride in their work. A company of 150 girls were recently sent to Wayne county to care for the cherry crop there, and special calls of this kind are frequent. The women workers in America's fields show the patriotic enthusiasm that England has taken pride in.

A KINGLY KING.

The American people are not as a rule enamored of kings. They take no stock in the doctrine of their divine right. They believe in taking their democracy straight, without any imperial or royal frills.

But there is not a red-blooded man in America who will not subscribe heartily to the following tribute in the London Times of July 9 to the King of the Belgians:

A King Indomitable.

The coming to this country of the King and Queen of the Belgians must not be allowed to pass without a special word of welcome. They came to be present at the celebration of the Royal Silver Wedding on Saturday—a mark of friendship which King George and the Queen will have appreciated. Not before this, since the war began, has King Albert crossed to these shores, although others of his family have found a welcome here. It has been his part to sustain his Army in the field by his companionship and example, and well he has played it. Perhaps we in this country, while we bear our own burdens of anxious work, do not think enough of the long-drawn sufferings of the high-souled people of Belgium who live under the heel of the enemy. The thought of them can never be absent from the mind of their King, and between him and them there is the spiritual companionship of endurance undismayed. King Albert's refusal to sacrifice the honor of his country for the price that Germany offered has its place among the great decisions of history. His stanchness through these weary years of war, his faithfulness to the remnant of Belgian soil that is preserved inviolate from invasion, his modest yet shining endowment of personal gallantry and brave patience, have won for him the warm admiration and affection of the British people, who honour a man unbowed by the misforunes of his kingship. His wife they respect and honour, too, for her devotion, her courage, and her proud contempt of the circumstances of ease at which she might have snatched. In the King and Queen of the Belgians Great Britain salutes the very coul of loyalty to a word pledged, high minds not cast down by long misfortune, hope and confidence indomitable.

FAILURE OF TERRORISM.

Generals Von Moltke, Von Bernhardi and Von Clausewitz officially concurred in the Prussian war philosophy stated by General Von Hartmann as follows:

"The enemy state must not be spared the want and wretchedness of war. These are particularly useful in shattering its energy and subduing its will. Whenever a national war breaks out terrorism becomes a necessary military principle. It is a gratuitous illusion to suppose modern war does not demand far more brutality, far more violence and an action far more general than was formerly the case. When international war has burst upon us terrorism becomes a principle made necessary by military considerations."

This infernal doctrine of German military policy has brought woe and disatser to Germany. But for it Germany would not have forced the United States into the contest.

The kaiser's air raids on British and French cities have in no wise benefited the German arms.

The submarine warfare has not kept a pound of meat or bread from British stomachs.

The murder of prisoners and the bayoneting of infants and raping of women by the Huns have enraged, but not terrorized the people of France and Belgium, but have made more determined their purpose to accept no peace that does not include the downfall of the hellish system built up by German military autocracy. With the fervent wish that it might include the extermination or banishment of the whole Hohenzollern family and all the high counsillors of state who are responsible for the long train of inexcusable crimes committed in the name of terrorism and frightfulness.

SYSTEM.

General Baron von Freytag—deputy chief of the kaiser's general staff—in his recent book on the present war asserts with the calm confidence of a coyote announcing his purposes with respect to sheep, that, in the future war to establish Germany's world dominion after this preliminary war is over, the present atrocities will be continued as a part of the German military system.

He admits that the rule of civilized warfare has been that armies war only against other armies, not against the civilian population.

That rule, he says, is now abrogated because of the fact that modern warfare is not a war of army against army but of nation against nation.

He says: "The principle that war is directed only against the armed strength of the enemy state and not against the population could not under these circumstances be upheld by our troops."

That means that a woman, a baby is as much an enemy soldier as a man in uniform armed to the teeth.

Will God permit the devil named Wilhelm Hohenzollern to prevail in his fight against humanity?

No! And that utterly hateful doctrine will be driven from the world for all time by the forces of democracy and decency now fighting the good fight against the powers o fdarkness.

The government wants 360,000 ax handles. The Huns are to get it where the chicken got ITS. (This may not be the best of English, but it fits the situation.)

TAKEN BY STORM.

The cruel winds tore at the waves as if to whirl them away.

The man and the maid sat close together on the bench and watched the storm.

"How the wind howls, darling," said she, yelling to make herself heard.

"Yes," shrieked her lover.

"Why does it howl?" she screamed

"Dunno. Perhaps it's got the tooth ache," he bellowed.

"The toothache?" she howled. "However—"

"Yes," he roared. "Haven't you heard of the teeth of the gale"

Then the wind howled worse than ever as she handed him back the engagement ring.—Stray Stories.
