NEW YORK, Nov. 25 .- Financial, industrial and political developments exerted in varying degree their disturbing influences over today's active stock market, the latter factor probably outweighing all other consider-

In point of fact, the monetary situation gave promise of early improvement as indicated by last Saturday's favorable bank statement and moderate offerings of time funds from interior institutions.

Trade conditions also were viewed with less pessimism in conservative circles, where it was recognized that Washington is directing its energies towards a definite program of readustment with the least disturbance to the country's important industries Secretary McAdoo's forthcoming etirement from the management of the nation's transportantion systems furnished the political element that

REAL ESTATE REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CXLV

HOW HARRY UNDERWOOD MET MRS. GRAHAM

"You don't seem delighted to see me. I am surprised at you.

Harry Underwood towered above of him. me, his handsome face marred by the little leering smile he generally wears, his bold, laughing eyes staring down into my horrified ones. I do not believe that ever a woman of a more superstitious time dreaded the evil eye as I do the glance of Harry Underwood. He is fast becoming a bogie to me ne bobs up in my path at the most unexpected times. And whenever I see him there comes involuntarily to my mind the cool matter-of-fact tones of Lillian Gale, and the astonishing words which she uttered at my chafing dish party: You are not used to our ways or should not bother to tell you this. But I can see that you are very much annoyed at Harry, and I don't blame But you mustn't mind him-He is really harmless. He falls in love with every new face he sees has a violent attack, then gets over it just as quickly. You are an entirely new type to him. so I suppose his attack this time will be a little more prolonged. He'll make violent love to you behind my back and before my face, but you mustn't mind him. understand, and I'll straighten him out when he gets too annoying." I tried to assure myself that Mrs. Underwood had been mistaken. But the look in her husband's eyes whenever he met mine always made me uncomfortable. There was bold admiration in every glance, but also lurking behind it there was a touch of malevolence.

I was much puzzled, too, by his presence in the Aquarium. It seemed to me that of all places in the world.

peal to him. A Frigid Greeting.

"How do you do," I managed to rasp. trying to be courteous and chill- What then?" He snapped the last ing in the same breath. Even with my slight experience in such manners I touching mine. saw that he had been drinking heavily, and that the two men that stood behind him, and who were evidently anxious to avoid attention, were in even worse condition than he. "How do you do," he mocked seizing my hand and bringing it almost up to his shoulder in a burlesque of a frigid greeting. "You don't seem glad to see me at all. You don't seem surprised either. did not know. He evidently had been drinking enough to make him tresponsible. He did not give me time to ponder iong, however. "Who is your lady No 54 friend," he burlesqued. "Introduce me." A man less audacious than Harry Underwood would have been daunted by the picture my mother in-law pre-pression that held disgust mingled with the curiosity an explorer might feel at meeting some strange specimen of animal in his travels. "Mrs. Graham, this is Mr. Underwood." I managed to stammer. Mr. Underwood, Mrs. Graham. Dicky's mother." My mother-in-law may overawe ordinary people, but Harry Underwood minded her disdain no more than he shaking it as warmly as if it had belonged to some long-lost friend.

Aren't You Curious?"

"Well! Well" he said effusively But this is great. Dear old Dicky's mother!" He stooped and fixed t speculating stare upon her. "You mean his sister," he said reprovingly at me. "Don't tell me you mean his mother. No, no. I can't believe that." He shook his head solemnly. Evdently he was much impressed with himself. If I had not been so miserable i could have smiled at the idea of Harry Underwood trying on the elder Mrs. Graham, the silly specious flatteries he addressed to most women. My mother-in-law did ner was superb in its haughty reserve, although I could not say much for her courtesy. As he released her acres in I. N. His silly repetitions, his sturred enunciation, his slightly unsteady figure made me realize with a quick horror that the man was more intoxicated than I supposed. How to get away from him as quickly as possible was the problem I faced. I decided to humor him as I would any other insane person I dreaded.

"I am never curious," I respanded lightly. "I suppose, of course, that you are here to visit the Aquarium, as we are.

"Visit the Aquarium. Ha! Ha! That's a good one," he retorted. laughing bois'erously. "Not but what water looks good to me today," he went on reflectively "Any kind of water looks good to yours truly this morning."

There didn't seem to be any answer to make to this speech, so I kept silent. But to the irresponsible mood of the man before me silence only meant provoking him to more absurdities. Into his eyes there flashed the dancing, im wish look I had learned to dread. He came a step nearer to me and looked down at me malicious-"Suppose, me proud beauty," with the bur's sque imitation of the stage villain which he affects, "suppose I had been on your trail for days. Supnose that these were me faithful henchmen." He waved an unsteady hand toward his companions, who had withdrawn from us as far as they conveniently could. "Suppose I intended to carry you off to a lonely sland, and there make you mine.
