"When a Fellow Needs a Friend"—Is when as in "The Sign Invisible" the special Thanksgiving program at the Liberty, he is staggering through a blinding storm in the mountains—has lost his way and doesn't care where he lands anyhow. About that time the chords of "Lead Kindly Light," floating through pelting weather, would sound mighty good. There is more than one touching bit in this big drama of defiant man vs. dominant nature.

Lloyd Ivie Wounded

The name of Lloyd W. Ivie, son of Mrs. Mae Ivie of Salem, is mentioned in the casualty list of yesterday as severely wounded. It is apparent from communications received from him that he was wounded on August 5, that he has now recovered and has been on active duty since that time as an escort for German prisoners. He enlisted in an engineering regiment April 2, 1916, and was stationed at Vancouver barracks for some time. While in hospital he was at Nantes, France.

Big Work Is Ahead

The state food administration considers that its most important work lies ahead and that the offices of the county food administrators shall be continued. This was the sentiment expressed at a meeting of the county administrators in Portland Tuesday. C. M. Lockwood, Marion county food administrator, who attended the meeting, says that the clerical forces are not to be reduced. No special action has yet been taken relative to future policies, this being allowed to await until National Administrator Hoover has decided what is to be done by this country relative to feeding European peoples. The men at the Portland meeting felt that Turkey and Bulgaria are not entitled to assistance from the United States.

THE THANKSGIVING TURKEY

Thanksgiving is only one-half observed when the turkey is absent from the dinner meal, with its highly flavored cloud of steam and sundry tantalizing odors trailing in its wake. The turkey is first in the hearts of his countrymen during the holiday seasons.

However, not every turkey is fit for a king or a feast; as a turkey is only a turkey when it is in proper condition and properly cooked.

Some people will buy turkeys at any cost or in any condition, just so they are getting a turkey seems to be all they are after. Off to market or to the store they go, with a huge basket hung on their arm, and there they buy our feathered friend, the turkey, and often, oh, such a turkey it is! None of your old, poor, thin, bony varieties for me if you please, but the very best that can be had, the one that is well-fattened, yellow, of a sweet, fresh odor, dry-picked, and presenting an attractive appearance. For the possession of such a turkey, the dealers will strive and the man or woman with the market basket will often go to the very bottom or his or her purse. The man or woman raising such birds need not be in debt or have a mortgage on the farm. No poultryman ever yet has had difficulty in disposing of or obtaining the highest market price for such turkeys.

If you will only take a glance at the different stalls in any of the markets, you will often find them plentifully supplied with common or ordinary stock of turkeys, but the large, plump, yellow-skinned, rich looking, well-fattened and neatly dressed birds are generally scarce.

Now, if such quality birds are so much in demand, and command such extremely high prices, what is the cost of producing such over that of the ordinary grades? If you will only think for a moment you will find that it is a very little.

It simply requires a little better feeding, a little more whole corn and wheat a few weeks prior to marketing, and a little more care or painstaking when dressing and preparing for shipping or marketing, to make the difference in value equal to several times the slight increase in time, labor and expense required.
