CHAPTER CCV

HOW. DICKY'S MOTHER LIKED! THE NEW HOME

"Richard! Margaret!" My mother in-law's voice rose high and sharp as she faced us. You cannot mean that -"miserable shanty is going to be our home for the summer!" Dicky squirmed uneasily, while I quietly tried to slip quietly out of the room. But my mother-in-law forestalled me. "Don't run away, Margaret," she said boldly, "although I should think you'd want to if you had any hand in selecting this. Why, it's a perfect

We were all standing in the living coom of the Brennan house, to which the sole Marvin taxicab had brought Dicky and his mother. Katie and I had come out early in the morning in order to have fires built and a warm meal ready for the elder Mrs. Graham's comfort. But her first look at the inside of the house had drawn an impatient protest from her. I had not shared Dicky's enthusiasm for the place at first, but I defy any woman to spend hours in arranging the furniture and draperies of a house without acquiring a liking for her handiwork. By the time I had hung the last curtain I was genuinely fond of the old house

The long living room appeared most attractive to my eyes as we stood looking at it. The Greplaces in it and the dining room were inexpensive but good, of red brick mellowed by time. In both I had wood fires going. Mother Graham's mahogany gate-legged table was drawn up at one side of the fireplace. Upon it in the identical earthen pot in which Dicky had once so successfully arranged flowers, were some branches of yellow forsythia, which I had found in the dooryard. The wall paper had touches of yellow and olive in it, and I had tried leave me alone for a few minutesto keep that fact in mind in my The shock of seeing this place has choice of rugs which were really rather creditable imitations of the or- before I eat anything." iental patterns, and in my window draperies, which were of the thinnest cream fabric with tiny hollow and went swiftly down the stairs to roses and buds running riot over them.

Dicky caught me in his arms. All three os us, Dicky, his mother. them of all sizes, kinds and degrees of repair. The best of these I had put in the living room, and from the erent receptacles. A comfortable couch in brown leather, which had ure was piled high with pillows in gay, cretonne covo-ings a number of chairs, some of them Mother Graham's, and some new, stood invitingly near the low windows. A small upright piano which I had rented in the village occupied a niche which appeared to made for it and completed the furnishings of the room.

What Madge Did. I had seen Dicky's eyes light up with admiration at his first sight of the room, but his mother's disapproval of the place had given him no chance to say anything about it-He turned to her protestingly. "What do you expect for $35 a month with these grounds? A modern house with new decorations? For my part I think this room is wonderfully attractive. Madge, you certainly have done wonders with it." He turned to me enthusiastically, and I suddenly felt more than paid for all my work and worry. "I am not criticizing Margaret's la-bors," my mother-in-law returned

"It's almost futuristic that stuff." 'It could be safely worshipped ac- No. 74 Leave Salem...... 3:50 p.m. cording to the Bible rule," she said grimly, "for it certainly resembles nothing above, on, or under the earth or in the waters of the deep." Dicky threw back his head and laughed good-humoredly. "Have it your own way, mother," he said easily. "Come in and see the rest of the shack."

He escorted her to the dining room boards instead of the usual plaster sides and ceilfng. Built in at the side of the red brick fireplace was a cupboard with glass doors, in which I had arranged my little store of china and glass. The big fall-leaf mahogany table of Mother Graham's was covered with a white cloth and spread for dinner. . The square piano, Mr. Brennan fulfilling Mrs. Burchell's prediction, had neglected to take away. I had in desperation moved it into the dining goom where it comfortably filled an immense vacant space at one side of the room. Over it I had spread ? runner of creamy Japanese cloth son Street 15 minutes earlier). with a green vine running over it which set off the polished copper urfaces of the chafing dish and coffee machine. uinely sorry for Dicky. He had felt so much boyish enthusiasm for the house I knew his mother's disapproval hurt him. While her room did not call forth the codemnation she had given the library and the dining room-andindeed, it was the prettiest room in the house, with a pretty outlook upon the tennis court and lawn-yet she did not cease her criticisms upon everything she saw. The bathroom with its old-style tub and fixtures, the hall with its paper of hideous blue, which I admitted to myself was appalling, the doors, the windows, with their lack of screening-all shared her censure. "You haven't enough sense to rent a coop for chickens, let alone to rent a house," she said to Dicky, as she sank into a chair out of breath-

Then she turned on me, "I thought you had a little common sense," she said in a tone that implied that what judgement I did have was necessarily very limited. What possessed you to consent to this barn?" "Why, I agree with Dicky that It s decidedly worth while," I returned spiritedly. "I wash my hands of both of you," said my mother-in-law. "Pleasa

As I returned his kiss, I felt as if the vague shadows I had felt hovtop of each glowed a forsythia in dif- ering over the new home had vanished, at least temporarily. I did not know what the new home might come with Mother Graham's furnit- bring to me; the thought of Grace Draper was always in the back of my mind, but for a while at least, I was genuinely happy. (To be continued)

PIPE LINE MENDED. DALLAS, Ore., Feb., 3 .- The break in the Dallas water pipe line which conducts the city water from the intake on Canyon creek several miles west in the mountains to the reservoirs near this city has been repaired and water will be turped on again through the mains tonight. A thorough cleaning out of the entire system will be made before the people will be advised not to boil water used for drinking purposes. The line was broken one week ago by a large
