CHAPTER CCLIII WHAT THEY FOUND AT HOME

I do not remember much of the trip to the house in Marvin to Lillian's apartment in New York, which Grace Draper's sister, Mrs. Gorman, Katie, Lillian Underwood and I took following the telephone message from Harry Underwood. Lillian had told us all she knew. That Grace Draper was seriously hurt, Dicky slightly so, and that they were at the Underwood apartment.

This news, coming upon the heels of the letter Grace Draper had written her sister, and which Mrs. Gorman had brought us, stating the girl's intention to kill Dicky and herself, gave us a fairly good idea of what had happened.

Two thoughts clashed in my brain constantly in the hurried flight of the taxi to the Crest Haven station, the interminable slowness of the accommodation train from Crest Haven to the city, and the swift rush of the taxi Lillian had commandeered at the terminal to bear us to her apartment. One was the terrible gripping query, which throbbed ceaselessly in my mind, "Will Dicky live, or is Lillian deceiving me as to the extent of his injuries?" The other was an emotion of which I was ashamed. I felt that no hint of it should have entered my soul while Dicky was in such danger.

It was a fierce throb of joy in answer to the question which had so tormented me concerning the reality of Dicky's final emancipation from the thrall of Grace Draper's fascination. She had said in her letter to her sister: "By the time you read this I shall have gone on a long journey, the longest of all. There is but one possibility that will make me defer this journey until later. That possibility I shall find out tonight. But if the answer to the question I shall ask is the one that will make me defer my journey it is also an answer that will always separate me from you, anyway. If the answer is such as to make me take my journey, rest assured I will not go alone."

If her letter had meant anything at all, it meant that she had made one final mad effort to enslave Dicky, and failing had attempted to carry out the vengeance she had threatened that she would have "Oh! such rare company," on her "longest journey of all."

"Dicky, where is Dicky?"

Dicky must have refused her last wild appeal. He was all my own, even in death. Only a wife who has been through the living hell of jealousy that I had endured during the summer, can understand the peace of wild joy that went up from my heart. I would rather have Dicky dead, and know that his last heartbeats were mine and mine alone, than to know that he lived and had yielded to the wiles of the beautiful siren I so hated.

Betty, Lillian's colored cook, who was devoted to her mistress, opened the door for us as soon as she heard the last step. "Fo de Lawd's sake, Miss Lillian!" she exclaimed, lifting her hands and her whole ponderous form in indignation, "whateber am goin' on in dis house? I jes' tell yo' it's scandalous, dat's what it is. I see got a good name, I has, and I nebber was mixed wif' no shootin's, and stabbin's and mysterious women in all my life befo'." I see got my reputation, Betty," Lillian advised grimly. "I'll see that it remains spotless. You get upstairs now at once, and tell Mr. Underwood I've come."

She motioned us into the living room of the old-fashioned mansion, of which she had taken two floors and made a wonderful artistic home in lieu of the ordinary modern apartment.

"Take off your things," she said, kindly, lifting up to me "I don't want you to upstairs until I have found out the exact state of things."

I felt as if I were suffocating as I sank into the nearest chair, to be so near Dicky and yet not be able to see him. The suspense was maddening.

And in a chair near to mine all the misery that must have shown in my own face was reflected on that of Mrs. Gorman, Grace Draper's sister, but she uttered no sound, only twisted and untwisted the large capable housewife's hands that lay in her lap.

Harry Underwood's quick, firm step sounded on the stairs. In another moment he was in the room, followed closely by Betty.

Regardless of the staring servants, "STOMACH UPSET?"

Get at the Real Cause—Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

That's what thousands of stomach sufferers are doing now. Instead of taking tonics, or trying to patch up a poor digestion, they are attacking the real cause of the ailment—clogged liver and disordered bowels.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets arouse the liver in a soothing, healing way. When the liver and bowels are performing their natural functions, away goes indigestion and stomach troubles.

If you have a bad taste in your mouth, tongue coated, appetite poor, lazy, don't-care feeling, no ambition or energy, troubled with undigested foods, you should take Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil. You will know them by their olive color. They do the work without griping, cramps or pain. Take one or two at bedtime for quick relief, so you can eat what you like. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

of prudence, of decorum, I sprang at him, clutched his coat with both hands and shook him, crying hoarsely: "Dicky, where is Dicky? Is he badly hurt? I must see him at once."

"My Sister, is She—"

Before he could reply Lillian interposed sharply. "Betty, take Mrs. Gorman's maid to the kitchen with you and make her comfortable until I come to you. Katie, go with Betty. And remember, whatever has happened here tonight is none of your business. See that you keep your mouths shut."

As they hurried out of the room, Harry Underwood took my hands down gently, and holding them in his own, with a chivalric reverence, utterly foreign to the Harry Underwood I had known, said quietly, "Of course, you shall see him. He is waiting for you. You may come up with Lillian right away, but be very, very quiet."

Mrs. Gorman stumbled to her feet, came forward with hands groping as if she could not see.

"My sister," she moaned, "is she—"

She could not finish the sentence. Harry Underwood's brilliant eyes softened with pity as he looked at her. He paused a long moment before answering her.

Mrs. Gorman seemed to brace herself as if for an expected blow. "If she's dead tell me," she said, monotonously. "Knowing the worst will be better than this suspense."

Mr. Underwood drew a long breath. "She is not dead yet," he said, slowly, pitifully, "but we are very much afraid she will not live through the night."

HE ESCAPED INFLUENZA

"Last spring I had a terrible cold and gripe and was afraid I was going to have influenza," writes A. A. McNeese, High Point, Ga. "I took Foley's Honey and Tar. It was a sight to see the phlegm I coughed up. I am convinced Foley's Honey and Tar saved me from influenza." Contains no opiates. Good for children. J. C. Perry.

SELF IS HELD CAUSE OF WAR

Dr. H. W. Lewis, New York, Speaks in Salem on New Movement

That education in Christian principles and simple brotherly interest for the Americans generally and for the people of foreign countries would have prevented the great war, was the assertion of Dr. H. W. Lewis, of New York, who delivered a number of addresses in Salem Sunday and Monday.

He gave the sermon at Leslie Methodist church at the Sunday morning service and Sunday night was in the pulpit of the Jason Lee Methodist church. Yesterday morning he was the speaker at chapel at Willamette university and at noon addressed a luncheon of the Methodist minute men. He was in Salem as a field representative of the Methodist Minute men centenary campaign.

In his addresses he said in part: "The American nation could have prevented this war and saved millions of lives and billions of dollars, and it must answer to God that it did not."

"We can very easily curse the Kaiser and the German people and the world knows that they are guilty, but how about looking at our guilt for a time. If we did we would find that we allowed the sin of this world to mature and bear fruit when God had cried to us for fifty years to warn us and to tell us to stop it."

Bishop Bashford said that "one million a year for forty years spent in Russia for missionary work would have saved earth this awful war. President Wilson said that Bishop Bashford was one of the world's greatest statesmen but we refused God the right to do the task God's way and then we had to resort to the horrors of battle fields to do it the other way."

"The selfishness and the narrowness of the American people for the last fifty years will be written on the records of God as the greatest failure of a nation's in the centuries of earthly history."

"We were told of the people in India who died of preventable causes every year to the number that exceeds those killed in all the four years of war on the allies' side and we refused God the few millions enough to teach that nation how to live right. We were told of the rationalism of thought spreading over Germany and instead of opposing it we allowed it to have a place in our schools and universities."

"We did not have time for the gospel and the church, we were too busy making money for our selfish interests to heed the cry of the millions enough to train our children in the principles of Brotherhood and with the character forces fit for world tasks."

"We have paid a price in blood for our failures but God forbid that we shall not have learned our lessons. We are entering a new age and the church challenges the business man and the professional man to the biggest task ever attempted. To make the world safe for democracy, as well as to 'make democracy safe for the world.'"

"The boys who shed their blood

Rate Adjustments to Be Submitted to Commission

Important freight rate adjustments of the railroad administration will be submitted to the public service commission of the states affected before the rates are finally established, says a letter received by Chairman Fred G. Buchtel of the Oregon commission from Max Thelen, director of public service under the railroad administration.

"We are making provisions to have proposed rate adjustments of any importance submitted to the state commission affected before they are made," writes Mr. Thelen. "We hope to have details worked out shortly and have your commission kept well advised of matters relative to Oregon."

The letter comes in response to a letter recently sent by Chairman Buchtel to Director General Wilson E. Hines suggesting that some method be worked out which will keep the commission informed as to recommendations of the district traffic committee, together with progress made, through the regional committee and such other administrative officials as are empowered to pass upon any case.

Canadians in Siberia Will Be Brought Home

OTTAWA, March 31.—Arrangements have been made for the return of the Canadian expeditionary forces in Siberia, it was announced in the house of commons today by Minister of Militia Newburn. The date is being kept secret.

The dominion contributed approximately four thousand men as its share of the entire force sent to the Siberian front. General Newburn explained that, in replying to the question of withdrawal, he referred only to the Canadian forces.

WASHINGTON, March 31.—Withdrawal of Canadian troops from Siberia, announced in the Canadian house of commons today by Minister of Militia Newburn, as imminent does not imply the return of the American expedition, it was said today by war department officials.

The question of early withdrawal of the American troops at Vladivostok was referred to Secretary Baker in a conference with newspaper men a few days ago and at that time the secretary was emphatic that no such plans were under consideration.

In this war paid the price for our selfishness and our failure to grasp the great fact that we thought more of self than of Christian education along international lines.

"At last we have got together and the Christian denominations are subjugating the service of the people to the church to the idea of the service of the church to the people. We are spending, from now on, five million dollars a year for war reconstruction work which includes aiding the soldiers and the helping of the people left destitute by the conflict.

"We are spending forty millions during the next five years in foreign work, helping the people to help themselves and educating them away from rationalism and infidelity. Another forty millions is being spent in the same period in home service work—helping those who come to our shores to be men, treating them as human beings and not as outcasts, helping them so that they will not have to live in squalor in the worst sections of our cities but may be homebuilders, helping them to learn.

"All of our work is being done along on sane Christian business methods and we are going to get results and avoid a repetition of the war which has just ended."
