Only Part Are Sent Under the circumstances, as Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, foreign minister, axplained to the Associated Press the German government considered it unnecessary to send the entire peace delegation-more than 100 persons, headed by six plenipoleutiaries to Versailles merely to receive the draft and return to Berlin with it, and would therefore, send a smaller delegation and later proceed to Versailles for the actual discussions and the signature of the treaty The German government then formally inquired through the armistics

Plans Are Altered Meanwhile, however, the plans and been altered, in no small degree apparently, on account of the fact that it was found a physical impossibility since the instructions to appear on April 25 were sent to German delegates to have the actual text of the proposed treaty by that date. This would necessiate the communicating the determinations of the allied and associated governments to a certain extent in outline, or in a less formal shape than the definite text.

For this purpose the presence N the plenipotentiaries carried with the peace negotiation: was imperative, quite apart from the point of prestige that plenipoentiaries of the allied and associated powers could not only meet with German represen-
