How He Knew About Hard Work.

"Why don't you get out and hustle? Hard work never killed anybody," remarked the philosophical gentleman to whom Rastus applied for a little charity.

"You're mistaken dar, boss," replied Rastus; "I've lost four wives dat way."

"Well," said Uncle St Bruggins after a solo by a fashionable church choir tenor, "if that ain't the roudest thing I ever saw. Just as soon as that young man began to slag, every other member of the choir stopped. But he went through with it, and I must say I admire his spunk."

"POGEY" SMITH IS HOME AGAIN

All His Pals Are Glad--Good Record as Sailor But Wants No More War

Lucas A. Smith is home. "Pogey" Smith will sound more familiar to the old Salem high school boys especially the old football crowd. He is a son of Joseph N. Smith and wife, who live in Highland addition—and have lived there ever since the woods were burned. "Pogey" served for a year and four months in Uncle Samuel's navy. Most of the time he was machinist on the U. S. S. Whipple, running principally between Bordeaux and Brest. He did his duty to the best of his ability, and he received his honorable discharge at Philadelphia on the 18th of this month—and then he headed straight for Highland addition, Salem, Oregon, and the first thing he did after the proper and formal greetings was to take off his uniform and make a present of it to his sister. Then he donned "civilization" clothes—that's what he calls them. Now, he feels that he is his own man, and does not have to take orders from anyone, unless he feels that they are right and proper and given for some good reason. He regrets nothing in his service. He would go again, under the same circumstances. But he is glad the war is over—and hopes there will not be another war. That is the way a great many of the boys from "over there" feel. They were soldiers; the best soldiers they could be, and the best sailors, while the job lasted. But they are glad the job has been finished, and they have little patience for all this universal training and other militaristic twaddle. They want to get back to work, and to forget the time when that was taken out of their lives because a gink with a palsied hand and a nutty noodle attempted to dominate the world and make all the people on the round globe kowtow to him and say they liked his outlandish and bloody kink. So "Pogey" is home to stay, and all his old pals will be glad to welcome him back.

Students Remain Loyal to Benjamin R. Perkins

Coming to the defense of Benjamin R. Perkins, recently removed by the state superintendent of the International Correspondence schools from the position of local representative of the schools, a committee of the student body of Salem has issued the following statement: With reference to the article in the morning papers of April 20th in regard to suit filed against Benjamin R. Perkins by International Correspondence schools stating that the schools desire an accounting and to restrain Mr. Perkins from selling scholarships. We, the student body, state that we have found that Mr. Perkins is perfectly willing and ready to make accounting with the I. C. S. without process of law. But the local officers' refuse to meet him halfway. We further state that Superintendent Snyder has made the remark in the hearing of at least one of our members that Mr. Perkins' accounts are all right, but the real reason for his removal has been that he deducted his commissions before admitting to the schools, rather than wait from three week to three months for his salary. This means which is rightfully his has all been used for the purpose of establishing himself in a position where he could cooperate with the students and pay his expenses. We want to go on record as stating that Mr. Perkins co-operation has been a great benefit to the students and we are behind him in his fight for right and justice. And each and every student is willing to swear that he has receipts for each and every cent paid by him, to the schools and that their returns from the schools agree with their account. Committee—L. C. Elwell, J. H. Humphreys, M. E. Smith, George Cadwell, Dan Bright, Paul Berndt, Carl F. Smith, J. W. Ruble, Eva H. White, Gladys C. Macken, G. C. Newgent, W. H. Walters, H. M. McDaniels, R. S. Armstrong. Misunderstood His Legal Rights.—The judge looked over the prisoner and said: "You are privileged to challenge any member of the jury now being impaneled." Hogan brightened. "Well, thin," he said, "yer Honor, O'll foight the small mon wid wan eye in the corner, there forinst ye." Griggs (protesting)—You don't mean to claim that your memory is absolutely perfect? Briggs—Well, I can honestly say that at the present moment I cannot remember anything that I have ever forgotten.—Grit.

Reading Advertisements has helped to make this a united country.....

Jim Hawkins props his feet on the rose festooned porch railing in an Oregon suburb and reads the same motor car advertisement that Cousin Peter is studying as he rides home from work in the New York subway. In Arizona you can buy the same tooth paste and tobacco that are used by the folks in Maine.

California fruit growers advertise their oranges and lemons to the people of the East. New Hampshire factories make ice cream freezers for Texas households.

There can be no division in a country so bound together by taste, habit and custom.

You can meet up with anybody in the United States and quickly get on a conversational footing because you both read the same advertisements.

Advertising is the daily guide to what's good to buy.

Advertisements give you the latest news from the front line of business progress.

Reading advertisements enables you to get more for your money because they tell you where, what and when to buy.

And it is a well-known fact that advertised goods are more reliable and better value than the unadvertised kinds.
