

Convenience, comfort and economy

Wherever you go—city, country, mountains, seashore—there you will find Pearl Oil, the Standard Oil Company's kerosene. Gives the convenience of gas without the dust and dirt of coal or wood. Easy to handle.

With a good oil cookstove you will cook in comfort all year 'round. Bakes, broils, roasts, toasts—economically. Lights at the touch of a match. No waiting for fires to come up, no unnecessary work, no waste. Concentrates a steady heat on the cooking—leaving the kitchen cool and comfortable.

Pearl Oil is refined and re-refined by our special process which removes the impurities. It is clean burning.

Pearl Oil is for sale in bulk by dealers everywhere. It is the same high-quality kerosene as the Pearl Oil sold in five-gallon cans. There is a saving by buying in bulk. Order by name—Pearl Oil.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCCIV

A WALK, A TALK AND AN ODD OCCURRENCE

"Breaking game laws!" I gasped, in answer to Dicky's sulky explanation that we could not go troutizing, as we had planned, because Mr. Cosgrove had been informed of the fish warden's presence in the neighborhood. "Oh! Dicky! how could you do such a thing, and let me do it also? Why, I feel like a criminal."

"No doubt," Dicky replied sardonically. "But you also make me feel like a blooming chump standing out here in the hall, blating out your sorrow for everybody to hear. For heaven's sake, if you're going to hold a prayer meeting about this, come inside and shut the door."

I obeyed his suggestion so promptly that he looked puzzled—he is not accustomed to docility in me when we are having any controversies. But I had been started into acquiescence by the sight of Mrs. Allis' door opening stealthily and almost imperceptibly outward. I knew that she must be listening, and the idea frightened me. She was too unscrupulous a woman to be allowed any knowledge whatever of one's private affairs.

I knew better, however, than to explain the real reason for my action to Dicky. I preferred letting him be astonished at my docility by revealing the fact of Mrs. Allis' espionage. I saw that he was perilously near one of his fits of temper—that the incident of the woman's opening door would be just the thing to set him going.

I made a quick resolve to lay aside all discussion of the law until another time, although I knew that all pleasure in my mountain trip was over.

I have an ingrained respect for law and order, and a horror for breaking laws, which is as much a part of me as the color of my eyes. But I put it aside, and tried to speak lightly.

A Glorious Tramp.

"I'll be ready for a tramp in a minute," I said. "Let's strike off down the stream instead of up the stream this time. I'm crazy to try that fascinating wagon track up the mountain which we saw just before we got to the station here."

Dicky looked at me curiously for a moment.

"Blamed if I can make you out!" he said, grinning reluctantly. "One minute you're raving over my leading you into crime, because we've caught a trout or two out of season, and the next minute you're as quiet as a kitten. But I don't care what's made the change as long as you've elbowed down from your high horse—I hate that angelic pose of yours."

"It's not an angelic pose," I retorted. "But tell me Dicky, is there any danger that we may be arrested for fishing out of season?"

"Not one chance in a thousand, unless some one reports us," Dicky returned. "This place is something like Halpin's where I used to go, so isolated that there is no chance for tattling neighbors to find out what's going along the banks of the stream."

"But suppose someone should report us?" I persisted.

"Oh, I'd have to loosen up some kale for fines, I suppose," said Dicky easily, tapping the money-belt which, when on a journey, he always wears ingeniously concealed under his outer clothing. "Unless," he added mischievously, "they'd happen to want to make horrible examples of us, and lock us up in the calaboose over night."

"Oh, Dicky," I wailed, horrified, taking his words seriously until I caught the twinkle in his eye and knew he was teasing me.

"Don't worry," Dicky laughed. "For crime unknown I go to a dungeon's cell, won't be said of you just yet."

He chanted the famous line from "Pinafore" so inconspicuously that I put my hands to my ears.

"Do stop, Dicky," I begged, "you give me the shivers!"

"All right," Dicky returned penitently. "I won't do it again; come along, let's go for our walk."

We had a most glorious tramp up the mountains. But I was so tired when we reached the farmhouse again that I declared my intention at the supper table of going directly to bed.

"Then you will not join me in tea tonight?" Mrs. Allis asked carelessly. But I saw a watchful gleam in her eyes.

"I should go to sleep talking to you," I returned lightly. "Tomorrow night you can count on me."

But when the next night came Dicky promptly vetoed my going to the other woman's room.

Madge Refuses Tea.

"It's too near the end of the week of which she and her accomplice spoke," he said. "We don't know whether it's tonight or tomorrow night they are planning to pull off that stunt of stealing the pictures. I may be mistaken, but I still cling to my first theory that the reason for her inviting you to drink tea all these evenings has been to get the chance to slip some dope into your cup so you'll sleep soundly on the night she wanted you out of the way."

"But what shall I say to her?" I asked.

"Tell her I'm sick," Dicky responded, nonchalantly. "I am, too—I've got an awful palpitation of the heart from all this excitement. And if we take turns watching tonight, as we ought to for nobody knows whether she intends to pull that stunt tonight or tomorrow night—I shall be in a state of nervous exhaustion by morning, so you won't be telling any terridible."

I compromised with my conscience, however, after I had knocked at Mrs. Allis' door, and she had greeted me with her most winning smile.

"I am sorry not to be able to come in for tea," I said. "Mr. Graham is feeling a little upset, and I think I ought to stay with him."

"Oh, I hope he is not ill," she said.

"Oh, no," I responded, "but he doesn't like to have me leave him. Men are such babies, aren't they?"

I tried to speak lightly, smilingly, but the malevolent little gleam in the other woman's eyes startled me.

"No, I would not call Mr. Graham a baby," she said slowly, "quite the reverse."

Your National Parks

With All Their Wonders

MAKE this a summer of vacation travel. Glorious out-of-door playgrounds beckon you. Heed the call. Get away and know the scenic beauties of your own land. Summer excursion fares.

Every American should visit the National Parks. They are the nation's playgrounds. Not only do you see peaks and canyons, glaciers and geysers, big trees and volcanoes, prehistoric ruins and Indians—you here see the old wilderness places of this country—the Far West and the Old West—practically unchanged.

In this vast region you can "rough it"—can camp out, climb high peaks, go fishing and ride horseback. Around the corner, so to speak, are miles of auto boulevards, modern resort hotels, and comfortable camps.

Ask the local ticket agent to help plan your trip, or apply to the nearest Consolidated Ticket Office, or address nearest Travel Bureau, United States Railroad Administration, 646 Transportation Bldg., Chicago; 143 Liberty Street, New York City; 602 Healey Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
