

A few facts the people of Salem should know:

THE MIDGET MARKET

Is independent and not connected with or controlled by any other market in the city.

We have been and are now selling the choicest of meats lower than any other market in Salem, or Marion county.

We have no "bargain counter" upon which to place an inferior grade of meat and attempt to fool you by selling it cheaper, when it is probably not worth what is asked for it in the first place.

The prices we advertise are not specials unless specified, but are for every day in the week.

Bear these points in mind when you buy meats, it will pay you to read our ads, as we will have news of vital interest to meat consumers of Salem.

As reference you need only to ask our customers.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCXXXII

HOW ROBERT SAVARIN FACED HIS WIFE AND MADE HER SEE THAT SHE HAD LOST HER POWER OVER HIM.

I do not think that the woman who had called herself Mrs. Allis realized for a moment or two that the Nemesis-like figure of the brown bearded man confronting her was the man whose life she had ruined, the man whom she believed dead, her husband, Robert Savarin.

For a fleeting second the artist, lost to the world for so many years because of his clouded brain, gazed steadily at the woman whose conduct had loosened his grasp on sanity. His sister, Mrs. Cosgrove, gave a little inarticulate cry and started toward him, but I gripped her hand firmly and held her back.

With one glance into the eyes of Robert Savarin I had realized that there was no need to be afraid of anything that he might do. For if sanity ever looked out of a man's eyes it gazed from the clear depths of the artist's sad, brown orbs.

"And so, Mildred," he said at last, slowly, and there was that in his voice which it seemed to me must scorch the very soul of the woman before him. "I find you here."

The woman whom we had known as Mrs. Allis stared at him wildly for a moment, then with an articulate cry put her hands to her eyes as though to shut out the sight of him, and swayed as if she were about to faint.

I rushed to her side and grasped her arm, but at my touch she steadied herself, took her hands from her eyes and struck my hand away from her with the force of a wild cat.

"Don't dare touch me, you hypocrite little beast!" she said, and I could not help but smile at the word "little" for I am taller than she. She misunderstood my smile, and her face darkened, while a look of such malignancy came into it that I shrank away from her.

What followed came so swiftly that I did not understand it clearly until it was all over. I had a sudden terrified glimpse of her springing at me with hands outstretched to claw, of Dicky's strong arms whirling me away from her, and of another figure that shot between me and the infuriated woman.

When I looked up from the shelter of Dicky's embrace I saw that Robert Savarin had gripped the infuriated woman by both arms, and stood thus, holding her off and watching her actions as he would those of a maddened animal, while she writhed in his grasp and hurled gasping imprecations at him.

"Still at your old tricks, I see, Mildred," he said pleasantly.

"That Cannot Concern You."

At the casual tone the woman in his grasp suddenly stood still and eyed him through narrowed eyelids. Intuitively I understood the change that had come over her. I had a shrewd guess that the Robert Savarin of the old days had not been wont to look in such unmoved fashion upon his wife's outbursts of rage.

"S-o-o-o. Robert!" she drawled at last—and I could not but marvel at her quick return to poise—"you are really here. Where have you hidden yourself so cleverly all these years?"

"That cannot possibly concern you, Mildred," he said quietly. Then drawing her forward to an easy chair he pushed her gently into it, and, releasing her hands, stepped back and folded his arms, regarding her steadily.

"Think both of them had forgotten there was anyone else in the room. And no one else in the room moved or spoke. It was like witnessing the climax of a gripping drama, and all our attention was focussed upon the two principal actors.

What Robert Savarin Knew.

"Concern me!" the woman laughed unpleasantly. "I should say it does concern me. You happen to be my husband, don't forget that, Robert Savarin, and for 15 years I have thought you dead. You will find that you cannot so easily throw a wife aside, like an old shoe."

"You are quite right," the man responded, "and I should not attempt it, Mildred" there was a deadly, significant pause—"if you were my wife."

Over the woman's face a deadly pallor crept and clung, but her voice was brave.

"You are raving," she said contemptuously. "Fifteen years absence and pretended death does not release you from a marriage bond, however irksome it be."

"No," the man returned steadily, "but the discovery of his supposed wife's marriage to another previous to the ceremony she went through with him is considered an effectual release, I believe."

The woman's bravado shrivelled before his words. I saw her bite her lips until a tiny spot of blood came.

"You mean—" she said faintly, at last.

"I mean that the proofs of your first marriage were placed in my hands shortly after you left me so cruelly," he replied steadily.

"To what extremity they drove me, or what has been my fate during the years since matters nothing to you. But the charge of bigamy which still hangs over your head ought to mean a great deal to you."

Oregon Men Chosen to Ask Government Highway Aid

PORTLAND, Or., June 19.—To go before congress and urge the immediate appropriation of money to match the bond issue of $2,500,000 recently authorized by the voters of Oregon for the construction of the proposed Roosevelt highway, a committee of five is being organized by those interested in the construction of the highway. Three of this committee will be from Oregon, and one member is desired from Washington and California. A bill was introduced in congress by Representative Hawley on Monday for the government appropriation.

According to announcement today of S. C. Pier, who had charge of the campaign for the bond issue for the Roosevelt highway, Oregon will be represented by Charles Hall of Marshfield, president of the Oregon State Chamber of Commerce; Louis G. Simpson of North Bend, and State Representative B. S. Jones of Tillamook county. Washington and California have been requested to name their members of the committee and the appointments are expected soon.

New Shoes Bring Campers to Conviction and Fines

BEND, Or., June 19.—New shoes with distinctive heel and toe patterns, worn by three tourists, left tracks in the soil at Beaver Marsh, south of here, and constituted the chief clue in enabling Supervisor N. G. Jacobson of the Deschutes National Forest and Forest Examiner T. M. Talbot of Portland to secure the first three convictions this year on charges of causing timber fires.

COFFEE SPECIAL

We advise all our customers to buy a good supply of Coffee Saturday. Our prices will be from 3 to 5 cents a pound higher Monday. The following news item appeared in the Portland Telegram, June 19:

$1 Coffee Likely to Appear in a Few Days

Dollar a pound coffee at retail is a possibility of the near future. Today the market is the highest it has ever been in the history of the trade and additional advances are appearing as certainties, ranging anywhere from 10 to 20 cents a pound over prevailing quotations.

This morning in Brazil there was an advance equal to 2 cents a pound while in New York the market scored the biggest jump in years. It has now reached the point where coffee is at the highest price in history.

Lang & Co., wholesale grocers, in making the announcement, stated there is a shortage of millions of bags in Brazil which had only about a one third crop. This fact, together with the enormous advances already made in Brazil and New York which have carried the market here up some 18 cents a pound, lead them to the belief that there will be an advance of from 10 to 20 cents here any day. They further stated that there was a strong possibility that coffee prices would go to $1 a pound in the not distant future.
