PUBLIC NOTICES

PUBLIC NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that I will not be responsible for any debts unless contracted in person with JOHN W. GRAHAM, of Salem Oregon, July 1, 1919.

BIRD LAW HELD CONSTITUTIONAL

The constitutionality of the federal migratory-bird treaty act approved July 3, 1918, is upheld in an opinion rendered by Federal Judge Jacob Trierer of the Eastern District of Arkansas in the case of United States against E. D. Thompson, of Memphis, Tenn., charged with killing and possessing one robin in violation of the act.

This is one of the most important decisions ever rendered affecting the conservation of wild life. It sustains the right of Congress to enact legislation to insure the execution of the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded August 16, 1916, for the protection of migratory birds in the United States and Canada.

It will be recalled that Judge Trierer in 1914 in the case of United States against Harry C. Shauer, decided that the migratory-bird law approved March 4, 1913, was unconstitutional. The present lay repealed the act of 1913.

GOOD DRESSING MEANS RIGHT COLORS AND DESIGN.

Mary S. Van Kirk, instructor in household art at the Oregon Agricultural College, writes:

Being well dressed depends not upon the money spent but upon the ability to select appropriate designs, materials and colors that are in good taste and suited to individual needs.

It is necessary to good taste and good judgment in selecting designs, colors, and materials, to know yourself—your figure, your colors, your defects and good points—and learn how to correct the one and emphasize the other.

If you are short and stout have the main lines of your dress vertical in order that the eye may be carried up and down the figure rather than across it. Where horizontal lines are introduced, as in belts, bottom of coats, tunics, etc. the shortening effect will be decreased if these lines are shaped or broken, for example, a belt shaped in front, or broken with lines of buttons will decrease the apparent size of the waist.

Color is one of the first things which attracts or repels in a costume. It should be selected with reference to the effect it has on the complexion, hair and eyes, and the personality of the wearer.

One with colorless hair, faded eyes, and insignificant figure cannot well wear gay, bright colors, because they dominate the personality and subdue the wearer.

Strong, intense colors require a strong personality and good coloring. They exaggerate palor and should not be worn by the pale, retiring person.

Very light or very dark shades are generally more becoming than the medium shades of any color.

Almost anyone can wear some shade or tinge of white because it is, generally speaking, universally becoming. Rich cream or buff counteracts yellow in the face and is good for the sallow complexion.

The ruddy complexion should avoid green, as it strengthens the red which is already too prominent in the face. Any red-haired girl can find a becoming color among the browns, creams, blue-greens and navy blues.

Materials for the stout figure should be soft in texture, medium in weight, fine in weave, dull in finish and inconspicuous in pattern. Some of the most becoming materials are fine French serge, wool jersey, firm quality of crepe de chene, georgette crepe, soft tulle silks, cotton voiles, medium weight dress linens, etc. Reserve the taffetas, organizes, plaids, and gay colors for the young and slender.

Anyone's love of color may be expressed in well-chosen accessories, such as parasols, bags, beads, ties, etc. and in various forms of decoration—embroidery, bead work, and corsage bouquet.

CHAPTER CCCXXXV

WHY MOTHER GRAHAM FLED FROM THE HOTEL AND WAITED DICKY'S RETURN IN ANGER.

We had not long to wait before we found out the reason for the latest tantrum of Dicky's mother. As we were finishing the something hot which Katie's forethought had provided for us, and for which we were most grateful as we had taken only coffee and rolls in our anxiety to get an early train to Marvin, she swept into the dining room, stately and impressive in her voluminous gray negligee.

"Good morning, Mother," Dicky and I chorused, rising from our seats to greet her. But she waved Dicky's proffered kiss aside, and chilled me with a look.

"As you have not bothered to wait for me, do not let me disturb your breakfast," she said with an air that made our breakfast without her appear a deadly insult. "Katie, you may bring me my breakfast now. Please see that my toast is browned right. The stuff you gave me yesterday morning was not fit for a dog to eat."

"Now, Mother, that is a bit thick," protested Dicky, as he saw Katie's lowering face.

"Keep quiet, Richard!" His mother snapped the command at him as if he had been a puppy, and Dicky promptly subsided. She evidently was in one of her worst moods, and we both had learned from experience that it was the safest plan to leave her entirely alone at such times.

So we made a pretense of lingering over our breakfast, for we knew that our departure from the table would fan her anger into an explosion.

She did not speak again except to Katie, until she had finished eating, and Dicky and I were so subdued that we sat ridiculously cowed, as two naughty children might have done.

As she rose from the table her manner was more than ever that of a principal summoning refractory pupils to her office for punishment.

"I wish to speak to you both," she said. "Please come into the living room."

We followed her into the big living room, where Jim had built a glorious fire of logs. But I thought whimsically that even so big a blaze as the one leaping before us could not take the chill from the atmosphere surrounding my mother-in-law.

"Sit down!" she commanded, as we entered the room, and Dicky drew up chairs for all of us.

"I have never been so insulted and annoyed in my life," she began abruptly, "and it's all your fault, Richard. If you had never brought that unspeakable person over he would not have had the chance to annoy me. As for you, Margaret, I cannot begin to tell you what I think of your conduct in leading your husband to believe you had never seen the man before."

"For heaven's sake, mother!" Dicky exploded, his slender patience evidently worn to the last thread by his mother's incoherence, "what on earth are you talking about?"

"Don't you pretend ignorance," she snapped. "You introduced the man to me yourself the night before you went on your trip. You cannot have forgotten his name so soon."

"Yes, Robert Gordon!"

"Robert Gordon!" Dicky exclaimed in amazement, and I felt as if a cold hand had clutched at my heart. What bizarre thing had the elderly man who had taken such an unaccountable interest in me been doing to arouse such resentment in my mother-in-law?

"Yes
