terms, pointed out that the rumor of the escape was unfounded and expressed surprise at the warning given by the council.

The Dutch government, the reply said, is conscious of its internal obligations and must be left free to exercise its sovereignty as it sees fit.

NITTI CONVOKES MINISTERS

TO RECEIVE PEACE REPORT
ROME, Wednesday, July 9.—Premier Nitti convoked the council of ministers tonight and received from Foreign Minister Tittoni, immediately upon the latter's arrival from Paris, a report on recent negotiations at the peace conference.

Deputies and senators said they were under the impression that Minister Tittoni must have met serious difficulties in his attempt to have the Italian point of view accepted at Paris or he would not have come to Rome.

the speed reached between 75 and 80 miles an hour. The dirigible thus was making better time than at any period of the flight to this side of the Atlantic and if weather conditions remain favorable, naval officers here believe the R-34 will see British shores early Saturday.

The first word received from the R-34 after the big dirigible left the American shores this morning was a radio message sent at 4 a. m. giving the ship's position as 130 miles due east from Long Island. Direct communication was maintained with the navy department thereafter.

At 10 a. m. a message said the dirigible was then making a good 55 knots an hour, equivalent to about 64 land miles.

PRESIDENT DELIVERS TREATY TO SENATORS

fact were seated near the vice president's desk.

Speaking from the same platform where 30 months ago he astounded the world with his first declaration for a league of nations, the president read his address slowly and in a clear, quiet voice. His manuscript typewritten on small pages, he held in his left hand and with his right he punctuated his utterances with an occasional gesture. Before him on the vice president's desk lay the treaty, brought by him in person from Versailles.

Oratory Lacking.

There was no attempt at oratory and no applause interrupted the address. Nearly every senator was in his seat, and all listened attentively. Afterward his supporters were unstinted in their praise for the president's words, while those opposed either declined to comment or declared he had dealt only in unsatisfactory generalities.

In his talks afterward with league supporters, the president was said to have discussed at length the Shantung and Irish questions. He was quoted as saying he was not satisfied with the treaty provision giving Shantung to Japan, but as declaring there was an informal understanding among the peace delegates that eventually Japan must make an acceptable agreement with China in the matter. He was represented as expressing confidence that Japan would deal rightly in the final settlement.

Irish Situation Discussed.

Discussing the failure of the peace conference to receive the representatives of Irish-American organizations on behalf of Irish freedom, Mr. Wilson was said to have told senators that the representatives had so identified themselves with the revolutionary element in Ireland that it became impossible to receive them. He was quoted as saying that both he and David Lloyd George, the British premier, had been anxious to arrange for a hearing.

The decision not to bind Germany to a definite indemnity, the president was reported to have said, was reached over his protest. He was quoted as saying he consented to the indeterminate plan to help Premier Lloyd George over domestic obstacles.

It was said the question of Fiume was not mentioned.

Reservations Objected to

In talking to the senators the president was said to have taken a firm stand against any reservations in the senate's ratification of the treaty. It was asserted he would not be disposed kindly even toward interpretative reservations to make the senate's position clear, pointing out that there always might be doubt as to whether any particular reservation really were innocuous or would vitiate some league principle. The president also was quoted as saying he believed a two-thirds majority would be necessary to write any reservations into the ratification resolution, but it was said afterward that he probably meant that the reservations, once a part of the resolution, would have to have the support of two-thirds of the senators to recur action when the ratification vote was taken.

Senate Ruling Cited

Among senate leaders the impression has been that only a simple majority would be required to amend the ratification resolution, and the president's reported statement met a sharp denial from opposition senators, who cited a senate rule provid-

"Come now, admit the truth. Where was Fred's arm?" asked the girl's brother next morning. "In his sleeve, of course," replied the sweet young thing. "And where was his sleeve?" "Around his arm." "Quit dodging, Sis. Where was your waist?" "Well, it was inside his sleeve and arm, if you must know!"—Yonkers Statesman.

ing that in considering treaties two-thirds shall be required for ratification but only a majority on all other motions and questions involved.

Regarding the proposed reservation under which the senate would declare the nation could not enter war under article ten without a war declaration by congress, Mr. Wilson was reported to have declared such a stipulation unnecessary.

He was quoted as saying that the constitutional inability of the United States to make war without a congressional declaration was one of the reasons why the league council was authorized, only to "advise" as to the steps to be taken.

Visit Short

In all the president's visit to the capitol occupied less than two hours. Arriving shortly before noon, he went to his office adjoining the senate chamber and at 2:15 was escorted to the vice president's desk by five senior members of the foreign relations committee. The applause following his appearance had continued for two minutes when Vice President Marshall rapped for order and the president began speaking.

The address required 39 minutes and at its conclusion, while the senate and galleries stood and applauded, he was escorted from the chamber by the specially designated foreign relations members. He left for the White House at 1:45 p. m.

Diplomats Attend

Mrs. Wilson and the president's daughter, Miss Margaret Wilson, were in the gallery during the address. The French ambassador, Jules J. Jusserand, dean of the diplomatic corps, had the unusual privilege of a seat in the president's reserved section, and many other foreign diplomats were in the diplomatic gallery.

After the president finished speaking, he sat at a bureau until Monday, when the ratification debate will begin. The foreign relations committee also will meet Monday to begin consideration of the treaty.
