REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCLXXI
HOW MADGE MADE THE BEST OF AN ODD SITUATION OF MOTHER GRAHAM'S MAKING.

"Well, children, have you made any plans for Dicky's birthday yet?"

I nearly fell off my chair in astonishment at the friendliness in my mother-in-law's tones. She had been sulky ever since we had come home from our summer outing in the Catskills, a sulickness caused by her resentment of what she chose to consider the indiscreet interest taken in me by Robert Gordon, the mysterious millionaire whom I had discovered to be an old friend of my parents. I shrewdly suspected, however, that her continued resentment was more because Dicky chose to take my part against her, than because of any real feeling toward me.

Nearly a year's experience, however, had taught me how best to manage my mother-in-law. When she indulged herself in one of her frequent "tantrums" I adopted a carefully, courteous scrupulously formal attitude toward her, and dismissed her from my mind. Thus I saved myself much worry and irritation, and deprived her of the pleasure of a quarrel, something which I knew she would be glad to bring on sometimes for the sheer pleasure of combat.

Her question was so sudden, her cordiality so surprising, that I could frame no answer. Instead, I looked helplessly at Dicky. To tell the truth, I rather distrusted this sudden amiability. From past experiences, I knew that when Mother Graham made a sudden change from sulickness to cheerfulness, she had some scheme under way.

Dicky's answer was prompt.

"That's entirely up to Madge, mother," he said, and smiled at me. "We shall be Delighted."

I smiled back at him with proper wifely appreciation of his courtesy, but I had hard work to conceal the malicious amusement that lay beneath the smile. Ever since the night meeting at Madison Square Garden when I had been so nearly hurt, Dicky had acted in such a boorish manner to my rescuer, Dr Pettit, my liege lord had been on his very best behavior. He was like a small boy trying to propitiate a stern teacher.

Although his mother tried hard she could not keep the acerbity out of her tones as she turned to me. She always resented any deference of Dicky to my opinion.

"Well, as Richard has no opinion of his own, what are your plans, Margaret?"

"Why, I have made none so far," I stammered, wishing with all my heart that I had made some definite plan for the holiday. I could see from my mother-in-law's manner that she had some cherished scheme in mind, and my prophetic soul told me that it would be something which I would not particularly like.

"Good," she returned. "Then I shall not be interfering with any plan of yours. I have already written to Elizabeth asking them to come out here for Dicky's birthday. This is an awful shack, of course, but it's the country, and the children will enjoy the woods and brooks and field even if it is cold."

Dicky turned to her abruptly, his brow stormy, his eyes flashing.

"Mother, do you mean to say that you have already written to Elizabeth without first consulting Madge as to whether it would be convenient?"

I trod heavily on his toes under the table in the vain hope that I would be able to stop him from saying the words which I knew would inflame his mother's temper. Failing in that, I hastened to throw a sentence or two of my own into the breach in the desire to prevent further hostilities.

Mother Graham's Parting Shot.

"Dicky, stop talking nonsense!" I said sharply. "I am sure, Mother Graham," turning to my mother-in-law who sat regarding her son with the most traditional of "stony stares", "we shall be delighted to have your daughter and her family. You must tell me how many there are so we can arrange for beds and plenty of bedding. This is a rather drafty house, you know."

"I am better aware of that than you are," she returned, ungraciously making no response to my proffer of hospitality. Then she turned her attention Dicky.

"Richard," she said sternly. "I have never been compelled to consult anybody yet, before inviting guests to my home, whether it be a permanent or a temporary one. I am too old to begin. I do not notice that you or Margaret take the trouble to consult me before inviting your friends here."

Dicky opened his mouth to reply but I effectually stopped him by a swift kick, which I think found a mark, for he jumped perceptibly and flashed me a wrathful look. I knew that he was thinking of the strenuous objection his mother had made to our entertaining the Underwoods and to the proposed visit of Robert Gordon to our home. But I knew also that it was no time to rake up old scores. I foresaw trouble enough in this proposed visit of my relatives-in-law whom I had never seen, without having things complicated by a row between Dicky and his mother.

MONDELL BILL IS EXPLAINED

Measure Reported to House by Representative Sinnott, Chairman

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—(Special to The Statesman)—Representative N. J. Sinnott, of Oregon, chairman of the committee on public lands of the house of representatives has reported the Mondell bill, R. H. 487, known as the national soldiers' settlement act, to the house.

The Mondell bill which is along the lines of Secretary Lane's plan, was not materially changed by the committee which has held almost daily hearings and meetings to consider the measure, since congress convened in May.

The bill contemplates the reclamation, acquisition and development of one or more projects in each state and is designed to assist soldiers to get homes under the best conditions. When such a project has been developed to a point where the lands either by reclamation, clearing, drainage, or irrigation are in fit condition for farming, the area will be divided into farms by the bill as reported to the house.

Five Per Cent Allotment

A payment of 5 per cent on the value fixed is required at the time the farm is allotted. Thus on a farm valued at $5000 the initial payment would be $250, a sum which the soldier could make while working on the development of the project for one to three years during which time he would be paid the going wages.

After the farms have been allotted, assistance is to be given the soldier in making his improvements, the maximum loan provided for this purpose being $1500, and not in excess of three-fourths of the cost or value of the improvements. During or in connection with the making of his improvements the soldier could by his personal efforts work and easily contribute his 25 per cent of "the total cost."

Provision is also made for loans to the soldier settler for the purchase of necessary live stock and equipment, the maximum of such loans being $1200, or 75 per cent of the total cost of necessary live stock and 60 per cent of the equipment, so that while it is assumed that in many cases the soldier would have some savings for a start, it is believed that a man starting at the beginning of one of these projects without capital could, through industry and frugality earn and save enough to make his initial and other payments as they become due.

Long Time on Balance

The balance due on the land shall be paid in amortizing payments extending over a period to be fixed by the secretary of the interior, not to exceed 40 years, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

Congressman Sinnott's report also states that the late president, Theodore Roosevelt, advocated the soldier settlement policy as proposed by Secretary Lane, in the last article which he wrote for the press; that President Wilson has urged it upon congress in two messages; that governors in 27 states have appointed commissions to cooperate with the secretary of the interior, and all of these commissions have expressed their earnest interest in legislation of this character.

Congressman Sinnott also calls attention to the fact that the American legion has officially endorsed the bill, and that 112,988 soldiers have made formal application for opportunities of employment and home getting under the terms of this bill.

Supreme Court Justices Scatter for Vacations

Justices of the supreme court have been lured to different parts of the state to spend their vacation period through the month of August and at present Justice George H. Burnett is the only member of the court who is in Salem. Judge Burnett will go to Klamath Falls with the Elks excursion laier in the month and expects to spend several days with Mrs. Burnett in that part of the state. Justice Lawrence T. Harris is on his farm on the Mackenzie river. Justice Henry J. Bean and family are on a motoring tour to Rainier National park. Justices Charles A. Johns and Thomas A. McBride have gone fishing, no one in Salem knows where. Justice Henry L. Benson will spend the month mainly at Klamath Falls, his former home, and at Lakeview. Justice Alfred S. Bennett is at The Dalles.

Lift off Corns!

Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.

With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!
