September Fur Sale

Neckpieces, Capes and Muffs. Some in match sets at Money Saving Prices

Months ago we made preparations for the opening of the fur season for all of our stores. Taking unusual care in the selecting of the furs, and in making sure that the workmanship was the best, if we had delayed until this time, we should have had difficulty in getting the qualities the women of Salem and vicinity want, and the prices because of market conditions would necessarily be much higher.

Fur Neck Pieces, Capes And Muffs

Some in match sets at prices that will save you money, including Coney, Opossum, Dyed Lynx, Black Fox, Taupe and Black Wolf, Red Fox, Hudson Seal, Martin, Squirrel at prices ranging from

$7.75 to $100

New Styles In Fall Sweaters

Flaring Sleeves and Tuxedos in Sweaters. Almost at the very moment when we hear that the straight tuxedo rever is to be seen in the latest suits, sweaters appear with the same rever. Certainly there is intense rivalry in fashions.

Shetland Wool Sweaters $4.95

Special Monday and Tuesday—Twenty fine new Shetland wool Sweaters (Buff Color Only) selected from regular stock, "slip over style" Monday and Tuesday or while they last, each!

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCCXVIII

WHY MADGE WANTS A HOME OF HER OWN

"Whatever do you suppose he meant, Dicky?"

I was sitting by the side of my husband's bed, having brought up a tray of luncheon for him. To my gratification he had devoured the last crumb, and was evidently much refreshed by his long nap and his meal. I had decided that as long as he was not seriously ill, it would be safe to tell him of Mr. Brennan's call with his mysterious message.

"Why worry over the mental vagaries of our very unpleasant landlord?" Dicky dismissed the question idly, then reconsidered it as quickly.

"Repeat his words," he said. "He insisted that his business was with you," I began, "informed me that he transacted no business with ladies, and left me with this gem for parting. 'Don't ever say I didn't try to give ye fair war'rain'."

Dicky laughed heartily, then suddenly grew sober.

"Never can tell what an old gink like that has got up his sleeve," he said. "Guess I'd better call up Birdsall."

He rose from the bed and putting on his bathrobe and slippers, walked into the hall and toward the extension telephone outside my bedroom door.

"Are you sure you are able to walk about, Dicky?" I asked anxiously, remembering the severe attack of lumbago he had suffered only the day before.

"Positively," he returned, and then, smiling with malicious enjoyment, he added, "The home remedies of Dr. Madge are strenuous, but certainly efficacious. I think the lumbago was routed before ever the doctor got here."

Flushed, remembering the raw turpentine which Katie had handed me in mistake for liniment and which I had copiously applied to Dicky's back, burning the flesh severely, I was glad that he had forgiven me the blisters sufficiently to joke about them, and then I forgot everything else in listening to Dicky's side of the telephone conversation with Mr. Birdsall, the real estate agent.

News That Disheartens.

"What is the trouble?" I asked worriedly, as Dicky finally slammed down the telephone receiver at the end of a conversation in which he had applied several uncomplimentary adjectives to our absent landlord.

"Why! Birdsall says that blasted drunken idiot won't rent the place to us another year, says we've spoiled his lawn by playing tennis on it, that we've had too many flower beds, that he didn't count on renting the place to two families, only to one."

"Two families!" I ejaculated, puzzled. Dicky laughed aloud at the look upon my face.

"To the vermal mind of our gifted landlord, Katie and Jim constitute the second family," he explained. "But fancy our being accused of making a tenement out of his place! Birdsall says all those things are only excuses, however. The real reason is that the old fellow wants to come back and live in the place. We've cleaned it up for him, after it looked like a pig pen for years, and now it looks pretty good to him again. I hope he chokes," he finished, viciously.

I was too stunned by the news to say much attention to Dicky's obfuscations. I had not known how fond I had grown of the rambling old house until I faced the prospect of being pushed out of it. But I realized presently that Dicky was talking to me, and that I must listen to him.

"To think of standing a winter out here, and then being cheated out of the next summer!" he said bitterly. "This house is a false alarm as a winter home, but it's certainly a bully old place in the summer."

"Don't Tell Me—"

"I think from what Mr. Birdsall said, the old chap has a lurking idea we are so fond of the place we might be induced to buy it," he went on. "But he'll wait until Gabriel decides to settle out in Marvin before he gets the price he's put upon it. Think of it! Fourteen thousand dollars he wants for this acre, with a ramshackle house, a barn ready to tumble down—nearly a mile from the station and 25 miles from the city. Where! Well that settles it for me. I'll go down to Point Lookout or Nassau, get hold of one of the best of those furnished shacks down there and we'll spend the summer by the sea and go into the city for the winter."

I felt my heart sink. I loathe living in the city for more than two or three weeks at a time. Apartment life is like a nightmare to me and more than ever now that I have lived in the real country with glorious summer and autumn colorings in warm weather and glowing open fires on cold days. I resolved to make a desperate plea for the life I loved so well.

"Of course, we couldn't buy this house, Dicky," I began timidly, "but don't you think it would be a good idea to look around and find some nice little place, not too expensive, which we could get an equity in and start a real home, which no landlord could take away from us?"

"For the love of Mike!" Dicky exploded. "Don't tell me, Madge, that you have been bitten by the bug of two-dollars-down-and-a-pound-of-tea-for-the-rest-of-your-life."

If you have, I warn you, you'll have to go and live in it alone. No statement suburban bungalow for mine!" (To be continued)

Supreme Council Meets to Discuss Galicia's Future

PARIS, Sept. 19.—(By the Associated Press)—The supreme council met after the presentation of the Bulgarian treaty and heard the report of the commission appointed to draft the treaty between the allies and Poland concerning the future of Galicia. The council also discussed the question of coal supplies for Austria.
