Guy Bates Post and the vampire, as portrayed by Miss Audrey Anderson in Mr. Post's sensational success, "The Masquerader," comes to the Grand for one performance, Wednesday night, Nov. 12.

"I don't suppose there's an actress in the world who isn't frequently called upon to advise young girls who desire to follow the theatrical profession themselves, this is especially the case with attractions that play extended runs or engagements in the larger cities, as does 'The Masquerader.'"

That is the confession of Audrey Anderson who plays Lady Astrupp in the carefully selected cast of Guy Bates Post, that comes to the Grand Opera house one night, Wednesday, November 12.

English by birth, Miss Anderson had her first acting experience with Sir Charles Windham; later she went to Australia for several seasons, but most of her professional career has been in the United States. In fact this young lady has "adopted" the United States as her home.

"There are two or three things that make it difficult," she said. "I suppose I'm like most other actresses, too, in saying quite sincerely that I would not exchange my profession for any other, and would not for anything give up the experiences it has brought me. And yet—well, one always hates, doesn't one, to really, I hate to."

guide a young person's footsteps a path which has such manifold vicissitudes, and is beset with inevitable thorns.

"I usually try to draw out the applicant and then judge for my whether or not she really has spark that will keep burn through all sorts of vicissitudes, find out if she has good health, finance, grit, and whether or not will have to encounter the opposition of her family. I try to imp it on her that in many cases it's going to school all over again—a great deal harder than any school she could select.

"Most of all I try to dispel the profession is an easy way make money; true it pays extremely well after—after, mind you, one comes proficient, but before that pay is small in comparison to labor required and the long hours of study and rehearsals. You will be surprised at the girls who the idea that the profession is a good time, good clothes and work. Well, when I've collected the data, or come as close as I give the advice accordingly, really, I hate to."
