Diving Suit Which Will
Be Used in Attempt to Salvage the Lusitania

The inventor of this unusual looking diving suit has so impressed the British Admiralty with its worth that he has obtained a contract to go down and examine the wreck of the Lusitania with a view to salvaging the giant U-boat victim. He is B. F.
Leavitt of New York. He descended 361 feet in Grand Traverse Bay, Lake Michigan, remaining under water forty-five minutes. The suit which weighs 450 pounds, has withstood a pressure of 220 pounds to the square inch and theoretically a diver could go down more than 500 feet. If the Lusitania venture is a success, Leavitt intends to try to raise other vessels sunk during the war or to recover their valuable cargoes.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCCXLVIII
WHY MRS. DURKEE TEARFULLY CALLED HERSELF "A HORRID CAT."
"What do you suppose she's going to do?"
Little Mrs. Durkee, round-eyed with terrified wonder, whispered the words to me as we took off our wraps in the room "like the heart of a rose," which Lillian had fitted up for her baby girl in the heartbreaking years when the child had been kept from her.
Since Marion's restoration to her mother I had never crossed the threshold of the room without a warm little feeling of thankfulness at my heart that it was no longer a shrine tenanted only by heartbreaking prayers, but a living human habitation. I knew that each night Lillian slept with her little daughter in the rose-draped bed and rejoiced that after so long a separation she had the chance to "cuddle" the child for whom she had so poignantly longed.
"I haven't the slightest idea," I returned, a bit untruthfully, for a vague suspicion of Lillian's purpose had crossed my mind.
"Wouldn't it be exciting if she sent for the police?" Mrs. Durkee queried, a spot of color glowing in either cheek, her eyes dancing. I saw that all the child nature in her, the little girl who had never grown up, was on tiptoe for anything that promised to be unusual. "That would be a novelty even for Mrs.
Underwood, to give a dinner with police officers back of the guests' chairs."
Inconsistent Mrs. Durkee.
"What utter nonsense!" I spoke sharply, for I imagined there was a tinge of malice in her merriment.
"In the first place Mrs. Underwood would not do such a thing, and in the second place, even if she were lunatic enough to request it, no police men would come on such an errand."
"After all, we can prove nothing against Mrs. Allis. Mr. Savarin saw her looking at him through a car window. She spoke to me at the station tonight, simply saying, 'It's you're only wasting your time trying,' and then we saw her go past it this house in a taxi and look at it closely. Imagine going to the police with a story like that, asking for protection!"
"But didn't she look through the window at Marion out at Marvin and then fire that pistol shot through the glass at you?" I could have laughed aloud at the little woman's inconsistency. At Marvin she had ridiculed the theory that Mrs. Allis had fired the pistol shot through the glass, yet here she was advocating it because it bolstered up her hope that there'd be something bizarre about the evening's entertainment.
"Why, don't you remember we made up our minds that the person who fired that shot was the man who escaped from the asylum and roamed the streets of Crest Haven, shooting off a revolver?" I asked the ques-
