The Story of a Honeymoon

Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCCLXXXV

HOW MADGE'S FEARS FORMED THEMSELVES INTO REALITY.

"No worries that a good night's sleep won't cure." I repeated ironically to myself the words I had just uttered to Katherine Sonnot, when she had left me for her own room. I hadn't wished to add to her worries by telling her of my own, but as the door closed behind her I looked around the walls of my room with a very lively fear in my heart. My terror of Mrs. Allis, which had slumbered since the night of Lillian state medium to choice 1918, 75@ Underwood's dinner to Robert Sav-185c; 1918. 60@65c; Pacific coast. arin, had been unaccountably revived 1919, 84@90c; 1918, 60@65c. with the closing of the door behind Katherine. And yet I had no reason for any such emotion. From the time she had watched us enter Lil- 18@25c. Peaches steady; standard lian's doorway we had seen nothing 21@21 1-2c; choice 21 1-2@22 1-2c, of her. Dicky, indeed, had openly pressed the opinion that Lillian's prompt action in guarding her home with private detectives on the night of her dinner had effectually frightened the woman. He also averred his belief that the only motive in her espionage was malicious to annoy us. that it was not she who

I tried to reason myself out of my panic, to tell myself that Dicky's judgment was undoubtedly correct. The Stateman's Classified but I had little success. I would have gone to Dicky's room, but I was afraid he would in some way show contempt for my fears, and my nerves were at such tension that I felt I would prefer real danger to Dicky's ridicule.

What Aroused Madge.

So with hands that trembled, and my heart beating a tattoo against my side, I made ready for bed. The windows were securely fastened, as I found when I tested them, and I drew the heavy curtains over them. as if the fabric were an extra protection. Then I undressed rapidly. my unreasoning panic growing upon me, until, when finally I was ready for bed, I dived underneath the bedclothes and drew the covers over my head, as thoroughly frightened by my own nervous fears as any child could possibly have been. I usually sleep without a night light, in fact, the tiniest gleam of light annoys me, keeps me awake. but before getting into bed I changed my reading light for one of lower power and left it burning. It was beyond my strength of will to go to bed in darkness in a room where every corner spoke to my heated imagination of the woman I feared. It seemed hours before I went to sleep, and I know that it was after 1 o'clock when I finally lost myself in slumber, for I remember hearing the clock strike that hour. ' My awakening, on the contrary, was swift and terrifying. A hand laid over my mouth roused me, and my terrified eyes looked up to see the face of Mrs. Allis looking into mine.

Get Up!" There was a sneering little smile on her lips which terrifled me far more than the blackest frown would have done. She spoke in a low tone.

guardedly: "Will you give me your word not to scream if I let you up? I have some things to say to you that will 13 in. be greatly to your interest to hear. but I don't choose to be interrupted. How about it? Do you give your

I hodded an assent with difficulty for her hand was firm over my mouth and chin. She released it at my signal, however, and stepped back from the bed. Get up!" she commanded.

I obeyed her and tried my best to keep my teeth from chattering from cold and fright as I did so. But I evidently didn't succeed, for Mrs. Allis snatched my heavy bathrobe from the foot of the bed and contemptuously threw it at me.

Scared plumb to death!" commented. "I thought you would be if I ever got you alone. You're not quite o brave now as you were when you and the rest of your bunch had me cornered up at Cosgrove's. If that quitter I had with me had the backbone of a goldfish there would have been a different ending to the Your darling husband will be hearing your teeth chatter and come to the rescue."
