The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER CCCCLXXXVI

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN MADGE AROUSED MRS. ALLIS TO RAGE.

"Now, we're ready to come down to cases," said Mrs. Allis.

"I made no reply. I couldn't. Never in my life have I been so thoroughly unstrung and frightened. The sudden awakening from sleep to find the hand of the woman I had so dreaded over my mouth, the wrestling of the promise not to scream from me, her contemptuous demand that I arise, throw on a bathrobe and listen to her—all these things had utterly unnerved me. Even my pride seemed to have deserted me. I was horribly afraid that in another minute I should weep helplessly.

But the vision of d-ning a thing so humiliating to myself, so gratifying to this woman who sat opposite me steadied me, enabled me to seize up on my sorry remnants of poise and will power and hold fast to them. I was careful not to let Mrs. Allis see any change in my demeanor, however. I felt instinctively that I could handle the situation better if she believed me to be still as panic-stricken as I had been when I first opened my eyes on her vindictive face.

The Mocking Goad.

"We shan't be interrupted," she went on, as she drew up a chair and sat down opposite me. "I've got the key to your door in my pocket," she gave an indifferent nod over her shoulder at the outer door of my room, which according to the chairs we had taken I faced and she had at her back, "and we'll just keep our voices below concert pitch, if you please."

She paused and gave a long searching, derisive glance. As I met it I began to realize just what the sensations of a mouse must be when beneath the paws of a cat. The woman was childishly gloating over me, prolonging the situation as long as she could. The conviction forced itself upon me that Lillian's surmise was correct, that Mrs. Allis was addicted to the use of drugs, and that in all probability she was even now more or less under the influence of one.

"And you really thought, you and your precious friend, that you could scare me off with a few private detectives scattered around her house?" she mocked at last.

There was a goad in her voice which forced a reply from me.

"I'm sure that Mrs. Underwood thought nothing about the matter except that she didn't care to have her dinner disturbed by an outsider."

"But I saw The Proofs."

Either the words or the careless manner in which I purposely uttered them angered the woman.

"By the time I'm through with Mrs. Underwood she'll know better than to give dinners in honor of my husband," she snarled.

"Your husband!" I returned in genuine astonishment, for I knew that, though Robert Savarin, the distinguished artist whom Dicky and I had found secluded in a lonely Catskill mountain farmhouse, had once thought the woman now known as Mrs. Allis to be his wife, he had discovered that at the time she went through the marriage ceremony with him she was already legally married to another man. In fact, the knowledge of this duplicity was one of the things that caused his loss of reason and his absence from the world for 15 years.

"Yes, my husband!" she jibed.

"He hasn't any real proofs that I'm not and he's too white-livered to use them if he had."

"But I saw the proofs," I persisted.

"Mrs. Cosgrove showed them to me. Legally, you are no more Robert Savarin's wife than I am."

I do not know why I was not warned by the glitter of the woman's eyes to avoid contradicting her. My pride had been aroused by her contemptuous goading of me, and her cool assertion of her right to Robert Savarin angered and alarmed me on Lillian's account. I felt that Harry Underwood's black shadow was enough to fall between Lillian Underwood and Robert Savarin without having this "croaking thing of evil" cross their path.

But she didn't leave me long in doubt as to my folly in answering her. She leaned forward in her chair and I saw her fingers working at her lap.

"And I can tell you," she said in a louder tone than she had yet used, "that by the time I get through with you, your husband won't know your face. You'll be his 'legal wife'—see fairly spat the phrase, "but he won't be apt to spend much time looking at you."

She put her hand into a pocket in her gown and drew forth a small bottle, her eyes gleaming the while with a light which I knew was born of drug madness, roused by my unfortunate words.

Light and The Eye

Light, as is well known, is composed of seven primary colors: Violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red—the spectrum. Some have greater chemical action than others. These, the blue, indigo and violet, called the actinic rays, are the most irritating to the human eye. The photography, where these rays are eliminated by means of a light screen or filter, much better definition is obtained, and consequently a more perfect picture. The eye is a camera in miniature. Its retina is the sensitized plate of the camera and is a network of tiny nerves called rods and cones. There are one hundred and thirty million of these rods and seven million of the cones, all wired to the brain through a cable (the optic nerve) no thicker than a slate pencil. The eye opens, light rushes in and bathes these rods and cones, they, in turn, telegraph the impressions to the brain, and sight is the result.

Motais proved conclusively that wearing lenses of various tints has a marked effect upon the nervous system, some causing the patient to be cheerful and contented, others having the opposite effect.

My specialty is treating the eyes—fitting them scientifically with glasses that will not only ease your eyes but also restore normal vision.

OLCOTT MAKES EXPLANATION

Executive Believes Fish and Game Conference Is Misunderstood

Reports in some publications relative to the fish and game conference in Salem Monday led Governor Olcott to believe there had been misunderstanding as to the results of the conference held at the capitol. In a statement, yesterday the governor expressed pleasure at the outcome of the meeting, declaring that it showed a tendency to harmonize the different interests.

Concerning the compromise proposal placed before the executive in his office after adjournment of the session, the governor is of the opinion that it would not lead to the beneficial results that would accrue from two separate commissions, but as a compromise said he deemed it a step in the right direction and as such it was agreeable to his office.

"Apparently there has been a misunderstanding as to the results of the meeting," of the fisheries and game committees at the capitol yesterday," said the governor.

"Following discussion among members of the committees and representatives of various interests in the senate chamber, legislators of the committees came into my office and presented the following:

"Would it be acceptable to the executive if a bill were passed providing for a commission of seven members, three of these to have exclusive control over the commercial interests and three over the sportsmen's interests—the seventh member to act as an arbiter in case of disputes?"

"I advised the committee that the plan proposed, in my mind, would not lead to the same harmonious and beneficial results that might be expected from two entirely separate commissions, but as a compromise I deemed it a step in the right direction and as such acceptable and agreeable to this office.

"At the same time I expressed pleasure at the outcome of the meeting, showing as it did a tendency to compromise and harmonize the different interests involved and took occasion to express by appreciation of the presence of the legislators and their fair and open-minded attitude."

MRS. SHURTE IS NEW PRESIDENT

Mrs. Lena Snell Shurte, superintendent of schools in Morrow county, was yesterday elected president of the Oregon County School Superintendents' association which closed a five day session here. J. W. Allen, superintendent of the Columbia county high schools, was elected vice president, and Miss Elmetta Bailey, superintendent in Baker county, secretary.

While in session the superintendents recommended a tax levy of 2 mills on all the taxable property of the state for school purposes, a condition being that the amount raised in this manner in any county be used in that county. This measure the superintendents hope to have referred to the people by the special session of the legislature for the general election next November. Another measure recommended by the organization for reference to the people is removal of the six per cent constitutional limitation restriction from school taxes.

The superintendents also have under consideration a bill making the minimum salary for county superintendents in Oregon $2400 a year.

An increase in the salary of the state superintendent is recommended and probably will be introduced as a bill in the legislature.

POWERS WANTED BY AUTHORITIES

Insurance Departments of Two States on Trail of Alleged Swindler

The insurance departments of both the state of Oregon and Washington are on the trail of J. E. Powers, alias J. E. Howard, who is alleged to be swindling people of the two states by representing himself to be an agent of reputable insurance companies.

Powers, it is said, has contrived to procure policy application blanks from offices of the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance company, the Southern Surety company and the North American Accident Insurance company. In receiving applications for policies he is alleged to procure a payment down from his victims and appropriate the money for himself.

While under the name of Howard he is said to have claimed a man by the same name who operates a garage at Hood River was his brother, and that he had been employed by him, in that way deceiving persons into signing up for policies. His latest operations in this state are said to have been at Hillsboro.

NUNN ANNOUNCES DISTRICT SHIFT

McLeod and Whitmore in Charge of This District in Highway Work

Increasing amount of highway work under construction and contemplated in eastern Oregon has made it necessary for the state highway department to redistrict that part of the state, effective January 5.

"Division headquarters will be established at The Dalles with C. C. Kelley, division engineer, in charge. This division will comprise the counties of Hood River, Wasco, Sherman, Jefferson, Crook and Deschutes.

"The work formerly handled by Mr. Kelley in Marion and Linn counties, south of Salem will be included in Mr. McLeod's division and that north of Salem in Marion and Clackamas counties will be handled by C. H. Whitmore, assistant engineer.

"Division headquarters will also be established at Baker with R. H. Baldock, division engineer in charge. This division will comprise the counties of Baker, Malheur, Harney and Grant, excepting that section of the John Day River highway in Grant county between Dayville and the Wheeler county line.

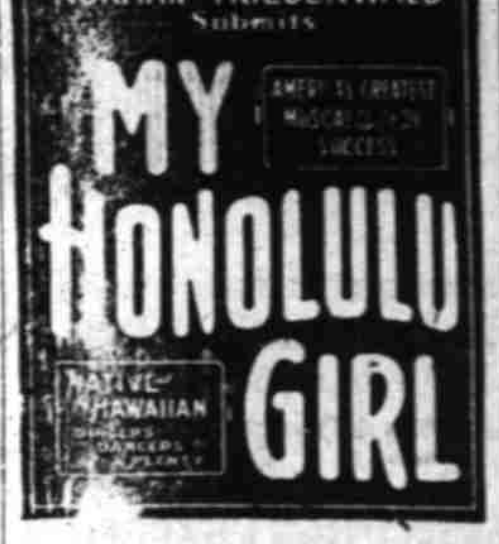

"Mr. Bennett's headquarters at Pendleton will be maintained as at present and this division will comprise the counties of Gilliam, Wheeler, Morrow, Umatilla, Walla and Union and the John Day River highway in Grant county to Dayville between the Wheeler county line and Dayville.

"I will take occasion at this time to commend the services of Mr. Bennett in handling the entire work in eastern Oregon but which has now grown to such proportions that it is justice to him it should be divided into divisions of a size comparable with other divisions in the state," adds Mr. Nunn.
