REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER DXIII
WHY MADGE IS WORRIED BY THOUGHTS SHE'S SURE AREN'T AROUSED BY JEALOUSY.

For some weeks I heard nothing more of the play on which Dicky and Edith Fairfax were collaborating. The secret of which Lillian had wrested from Dicky on the night following my farewell luncheon with Dr. Pettit. In fact, Dicky had made but one reference to it to me and that was but a brief one upon the same night, when in his arms I had received and granted forgiveness for our misunderstandings of the day.

"Did you hear what Lill said about the nature of Miss Fairfax's work with which I'm helping her?" he asked, casually referring to the fact drama with much "heart interest". And I may have been prejudiced, but if the dictation of that fragment was any criterion of the rest of the drama I feared that it wasn't remarkable for literary workmanship.

The Voice That Convinces.

I was wise enough to say nothing of this to Dicky. Indeed, I didn't mention the play or Miss Fairfax again. I took the goods the gods the gods provided, otherwise Dicky's evenings at home—he had no more engagements—with art editors—and made no attempt to entangle their peace by question or comment.

But any wife will understand that an obsession with me, I didn't believe that Dicky was in love with the girl—there had been a note in his voice when he made his denial of the idea to Lillian which had convinced me. But I was wild with curiosity and wounded vanity. I would have given a month of my life span to have read the drama, the brain child of which these two were the parents.

A remembrance of a little speech Dicky had once made came back with a sting like that of a venomous insect. Once one of the women taking my history course at the Lotus club had praised my lecture extravagantly, and had queried whether I had ever written any short stories or novels with historical settings. I had repeated her remarks to Dicky, and he had seen, what I hardly recognized myself, that her words had roused in me an ambition to follow her suggestion.

A Memory That Troubles.

"For heaven's sake, Madge," Dicky had said irritably. "Don't get the writing itch. You're not fitted for it, by temperament, and frankly, I don't think you have the ability for it."

I had never forgotten the sneering tone in which Dicky spoke, and I had never mentioned the matter again. Indeed, his manner had effectively quenched any spark of ambition kindled by the club woman's praise.

But the remembrance of his disparaging ability made the knowledge of his literary collaboration with Edith Fairfax a bitter draught for me to swallow.

I had never spoken to the girl, never met her, but I had seen her, had scrutinized her closely upon one or two occasions. That she was a gentlewoman, with all that the old-fashioned word implies, I was certain. But that her pretty, daintily poised head held any exceptional brain power I very much doubted.

And I was sure that jealousy didn't bias my judgment. In the days when Grace Draper was such a menace to my happiness I had never underestimated her ability or her mentality. But my trained powers of observation told me that the art student from Virginia, while the possessor of patrician traditions and breeding which Grace Draper lacked completely, yet was much the inferior in mentality to the other woman.

And then something else seized me, something which put all thought of Edith Fairfax and of her play out of my brain. It was one of the sinister premonitions which come to me sometimes, and which have almost without exception foreboded unhappiness for me.

I tried to fight against it, to tell myself that it was only a brain phantasm born of my mental comparison of the two women who had cared for Dicky but to no avail.

For there was born upon me the conviction that nearer to me than I dreamed, there lurked the malign influence of the woman who hated me—Grace Draper.

NEIMEYER RAPS LAND AND LABOR PARTY OF STATE

Salem Man Urges Spreading of Propaganda to Combat Non-Partisans

OREGON MENACE IS SEEN

Interstate Realty Association to Make Active Campaign for Sound Government

PORTLAND, Feb. 7.—Measures to combat the non-partisan movement in the northwest were adopted by the executive committee of the Interstate Realty association today.

The single tax movement and the newly organized Oregon land and labor party were assailed bitterly by the members of the committee. The doctrine of the Land and labor party is practiced would be a serious blow to the rights of property owners and real estate dealers, members declared.

On motion of Charles W. Neimeyer of Salem, a resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a committee to outline a definite plan of spreading propaganda throughout the district of the northwestern states to combat the non-partisan league and all other organizations which may be considered a menace to real estate. The propaganda is also to outline the objects of the interstate association.

District chairmen are to be appointed to take charge of the work in districts, with a state chairman directing the work. Property owners throughout the northwest are to be taken into the association as affiliate members.

This Pretty Girl Defies Age By Using Ordinary Buttermilk To Beautify Her Complexion

Tells Druggists Not to Take Anyone's Money Unless This Delightful New Vanishing Cream Quickly Shows a Decided Improvement. Try it Today at Our Expense.

Buttermilk Cream creates beauty almost like magic. The most wonderful thing about it is the fact that whilst it turns the dull, most lifeless complexion to radiant beauty and makes red or rough hands or arms snowy white, yet there is not the slightest sign of its use after application. It actually vanishes from sight and the most heated atmosphere will not produce the least oiliness or greasiness of the skin.

No matter whether you are troubled with a poor complexion, wrinkles, puffiness around the eyes, freckles, crow's feet or lines around the mouth, dry finger nails, or just a simple roughness of the face, hands or arms caused by wind or sun, you will find that any or all of these troubles will quickly disappear with the use of Howard's Buttermilk Cream.

To prove this to your complete satisfaction, get a sample quantity today with the understanding that the purchase money will be cheerfully refunded to any dissatisfied user.
