Richardson In Portland-

"I want to forget all about politics and say something about Salem as a manufacturing center," quoth Joseph G. Richardson, deputy state treasurer, who signed his name on the Oregon register yesterday on an over-Sunday visit to Portland, says the Oregon. "Salem's fruit juice and jelly concerns are getting capacity business, while the woolen mill is also humming from morning to night. Then, work is fast progressing on the new paper mill, and take it all in all. the capital city is assuming a manufacturing aspect which bodes well for its future. The old saying that Saem lives for the biennial sessions of the legislature is true no longer, if it ever was. In other words, she is now flying with her own wings."
