Better Teeth for Everybody

THE E. R. Parker System in Dentistry has done for the masses what old-style dentistry did for the few. It has made it possible for everybody to have their teeth skillfully cared for at prices they can afford to pay.

The work done by dentists using the E. R. Parker System is so good that it can be widely advertised. It is so good that it can be guaranteed. It is so good that, no matter what price you pay others, you can not be better satisfied.

An important part of the E. R. Parker System is to educate the public about the benefits of good teeth and the dangers of bad teeth. This is right in line with the welfare work for better health now being done all over the country.

There are twenty-four dental offices where the E. R. Parker System is used by Registered Dentists, who comprise the largest and most successful organization in the world practicing dentistry. Under this System, examinations and advice are free to all.

SALEM ROTARY CLUB ACTIVE IN ANNUAL DRIVE

Six Hundred Clubs in United

FIRST CONVENTION TOLD

Second Annual Session of Organization Held in City of Portland

More than 600 Rotary clubs in the United States and Canada and throughout the world are observing this week with special programs. The occasion is the fifteenth anniversary of the birth of the first Rotary club in Chicago on February 23, 1905. The week has been designated by the local Rotary club as "All Rotary Week," and is being given over entirely to Rotary activities.

The program of yesterday's meeting was devoted largely to a review of the origin of the Rotary movement, and its growth during the past 15 years. An outline of the policy and program of work of the International Association of Rotary clubs, the directing body of Rotary, especially as this work relates to the further organizing of Rotary clubs in foreign and domestic countries, also comprised a part of the club program.

The story of how Rotary originated, and how the institution has grown during the last few years until it is extending to all of the civilized countries of the world, is intensely interesting, especially as reviewed by the speakers on the program.

True Origin of Rotary

Rotary came into "being" with a group of four men seated around a luncheon table in a Chicago hotel. The four men were business acquaintances and for several weeks had been meeting together for luncheon. These informal meetings were held at the different member's places of business. As it happened, each one of the four represented a different calling—one a coal dealer one a mining operator, one a merchant tailor, and the fourth an attorney.

The attorney was the first one who advanced the idea of forming a club. His name is Paul P. Harris and to him is given the credit for starting the great Rotary movement. The meeting of the four at which it was actually decided to organize a club was held February 23, 1905.

A printer has at some time or other played the central figure in nearly every great movement in history, and Rotary proved no exception to the rule. It was soon after this meeting when another friend of the group—a printer joined the number and afterward became largely responsible for safely guiding the new organization during its early period of existence.

Origin Made Public

There are many different ideas in circulation as to the origin of the name "Rotary" as applied to the Rotary clubs. One example will illustrate the character of the many different conceptions. Two teamsters once noticed a string of autos decorated with Rotary banners. One auto became stalled and one of the teamsters, examining the Rotary emblem on the wheel, was overheard to explain to the other that the Rotarians were wagon makers and their emblem was the wagon wheel and the name "Rotary" chosen because a wagon wheel has a rotary motion. However, the true facts are that "Rotary" was chosen because the members of the new club had been the habit of having their meetings in rotation at the places of business of the different members.

As "Rotation Club" was somewhat inapt they decided to adopt the shorter form and call it the "Rotary Club." Incidentally, this meeting from place to place was continued for some time until the membership became so large as to make the plan impractical. But this custom, although of short duration, was responsible for one of the features that is observed today in many Rotary clubs. This is the "business talks" that are often given by members relative to successful methods that have been adopted in their businesses and how the Rotary idea of service has been applied to their work.

Plan Told

As other members were admitted to the new club, the principle was still adhered to of having only one representative from each business or profession. This would be a unique plan and would distinguish the club from other organizations. Then also such a plan would serve to sustain interest in the club, promote attendance, and make a member place a high valuation upon his membership. Time has proved it to be a plan adaptable to the smaller cities as well as to the larger ones.

Later years proved that there were many other advantages to such a plan. A membership made up of one representative from each business or profession is truly representative of the community. Such a body of men becomes an ideal forum for the discussion of public questions and the consideration of matters of concern both to the public and to the trades and the professions. United action by the club is much easier than with a large and cumbersome membership of several hundred or several thousand. It is impossible for any one profession or allied professions to become numerically strong enough to dominate the policy of the club. The business man is benefitted for such association tends to lift him out of the rut of his own business routine, giving him a broader and more sympathetic understanding of other businesses and professions.

Gain is Remarkable

But most important of all, it has increased the efficiency of the club itself by giving the officials a lever for the removal of any "dead timber" from the membership. The club can insist upon regular attendance and active participation or the surrender of membership to someone else in the same line of business. That this rule is rigidly observed is one of the reasons why membership in Rotary is considered at so high a premium.

The new club started out by holding a luncheon once a week and an evening meeting every month. In a short time there were nearly half a hundred members and a considerable number of others who had become interested and had asked to become members. Men in other cities had heard of this new club called "Rotary" and had written to the Chicago club asking if they couldn't organize in their cities. It was decided, though, that it would be best to wait until time had proven the experiment successful before giving encouragement to the organization of clubs in other cities. The Chicago club continued to increase in membership.

In 1908—three years after the first meeting—the second Rotary club was organized in San Francisco. Other clubs followed on the Pacific coast and then the movement spread to the east and then to the south until 16 clubs had been organized by the end of 1910. These clubs were all the result of seed more or less accidentally sown by members who were enthused by the Rotary idea and who gave of their time and money without thought of personal gain.

First Convention Held

It was in 1910 that the first convention was held and the "National Association" formed. The first convention was held in Chicago, and general officers elected, and a constitution adopted. Paul B. Harris was honored by election to the first presidency of the newly created association, and Chesley R. Perry, who was secretary of the Chicago club and who, with Paul Harris, was responsible to a large extent for calling together this first delegate body of Rotary, was elected secretary. This office he has always held and continues to hold at the present time. Paul Harris has since been honored by the conferring upon him of the title of President Emeritus.

The second convention was held at Portland, Oregon, in 1911, and
