REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER DXXXIII

WHY MADGE FEELS DICKY "COMES HONESTLY" BY HIS OBSTINACY.

"Well!"

The monosyllable on my mother-in-law's lips was a trumpet of exasperated defiance. Dicky, at my instigation, had just told her that he had tickets for a play she had wanted to see in order to get her out of the way for the tomorrow's moving into our new home. Evidently knowing her better than I, he had adroitly conveyed the impression in his bit of news that he didn't think she would go because of leaving me alone on moving day.

"If Margaret is such a baby that she cannot manage her own moving, it's time she learned, as the rest of us did," his mother continued. "It won't take Agatha and me long to put some things into a suitcase, and we'll get our trunks all ready for you to move before we go. I suppose we'll have to stay all night at some hotel, that last train back is such a tiresome thing."

I hugged myself in my sheltered corner at the ease with which the very situation I had desired was unfolding itself. Then Cousin Agatha joined the conversation.

"I don't suppose your wife would welcome my aid," she said, with her crushed-to-the-ground air. "But if I can be of any assistance to her I shall be glad to give up the theatre and stay with her."

I could think of nothing but Uriah Heep, as I heard her. All she needed was the word "umble," and the long, black, ill-fitting gloves to be perfect. I held my breath for fear that in some way her offer would be accepted.

But I need not have feared. My mother-in-law was in the driver's seat and had no intention of relinquishing the reins.

Dicky's Status Established.

"Don't be a fool just because you know how Agatha," she snapped. "You'd be about as helpful to Margaret in moving as a refrigerator would be to an Arctic explorer. You hurry upstairs with me and get the things you want to take with you. I'll lend you my jet set if you want it."

I saw Cousin Agatha's crafty old eyes light up like a child at the mention of the jet set, and again a wave of pity swept me for the poor old woman who had to be dependent for all her little feminine fripperies and pleasures upon the caprice of my irritable, if kindly, mother-in-law.

"There's one thing more about this," Dicky said deprecatingly, and I knew by his voice that he was immensely enjoying this situation of his own creating. "It means that I shall have to stay in town with you, too. I could never think of allowing you two to go alone, but it seems pretty low down to leave Madge all alone."

"Richard," his mother replied tartly, "sometimes I am ashamed of having raised you, you display so little common sense, and so much conceit. If there's one solitary thing about this moving that wouldn't be better off without having you around I'd like to see it. A man's no use on moving day, unless he's hired by the day and expects to be bossed. Otherwise, it's better for himself and everyone else, especially everyone else, if he's ten miles away."

"I Saw You."

"I ought to suit then," retorted Dicky, "for it's twenty-one and six-tenths miles from Marvin to the city."

But his mother did not hear him. She was already mounting the stairs with Cousin Agatha in her wake. They were as happy as two children over their coming outing, and there came to me a realization of the pathetic eagerness of old age to seize and hold fast such pleasures as could be grasped. I wondered if it were not the sense of the swiftly coming time when pleasure or pain or joy or sorrow would mean nothing to them, that made them so revel in the prospect of an evening's amusement.

Richard turned as they left the room and came swiftly over to the window seat, from which vantage point, behind the long window curtains, I had witnessed his carefully staged little comedy.

"I saw you!" he accused, laughing over his own triumph. "Aren't you ashamed to sit there spying on me when I was trying so hard to work out your little scheme?"

"I wasn't spying!" I returned indignantly. "I was in there mending some things which had to be done before they were put away, lest they tear more, when you all came into the room. I want to congratulate you, too. You worked your scheme very adroitly."

"Oh, you've got to slip it to me," he returned. "I'm clever, you know; you've got to admit it." Then he laughed uproariously as if some remembrance struck him.

"Did you see the mater's face when I told her I didn't think she'd want to go because it was moving day?" he demanded. "That was what fetched her. If I had told her about the tickets and had said nothing else she would immediately have discovered that she didn't dare to leave the moving."

Even as I smiled an assent to his words there flashed into my mind a remembrance of the time Alfred Durkee had told me the story of the Irishman who told his pig to go to Dublin when he really was driving it to Cork, pointing the tale with an allusion to Dicky's stubbornness. Evidently Dicky, as the old saying goes, "comes honestly" by his obstinacy.

COOKERY CLUB FINISHES WORK

Hubbard School First to Complete Course in Marion County for Year

The standard cookery club of Hubbard school district No. 23, comprising seven pupils taught by Miss Florence Beardsley, has the honor of being the first in Marion county to finish the year's work, according to Mary L. Fulkerson, county school supervisor.

For the year's work each of the clubs are given 19 lessons, all of which are to be completed the following November after beginning the work. The clubs are organized to give the pupils of the rural schools the same advantage to study domestic science as the pupils of the city schools, where a special domestic science teacher is employed.

The 19 lesson course covers home cookery from the first stages and when mastered the student is able to make light bread, cakes and other pastry. By the last and final lesson of the course, each pupil has to prepare and serve a meal, that is judged by some competent person.

The club is composed of Esther Dirksen, Mildred Morgan, Mildred Sandberg, Violet Sanders, Opal Smith, Vera Smith, Virginia Clark.

Southern Mothers Have Found a Way to Treat Children's Croup and Colds Without Internal Dosing

ALL mothers everywhere know that children's stomachs are delicate and their digestions easily disturbed, and therefore they should be given as little internal dosing as possible. Yet croup and colds come often and certainly cannot be neglected.

A North Carolina Druggist Solves the Problem

Thanks to Lunsford Richardson, a druggist in Greensboro, N. C., this problem has been solved, and Southern mothers have been given a method of treating cold troubles externally. Mr. Richardson discovered a salve that would vaporize by the body heat when applied over throat and chest. These vapors, inhaled with each breath, carried the medication through the air passages to the lungs, at the same time the salve was absorbed thru and stimulated the skin, attracting the blood to the surface and thus aiding the vapors inhaled to relieve the trouble. This preparation Mr. Richardson called Vick's VapoRub.

The Use of Vicks Has Steadily Increased

Starting with the customers of Mr. Richardson's retail drug store, the sale of this external treatment has grown, county by county, state by state, until now Vicks can be found in almost any drug store in all sections of the United States.

Mothers who once use Vicks always keep a bottle on hand thereafter. It is so easily applied, so quick in its effects, and, best of all, can be used as often and as freely as desired, without fear of harmful results.

DIRECTIONS FOR THE USE OF VICKS

Vapors Important—For these troubles a large part of the value of Vicks lies in its vaporizing qualities. So whenever Vicks is applied over the throat and chest, care should be taken to leave the clothing loose around the neck and the bed clothes arranged in the form of a funnel, so that the vapors arising may be freely inhaled.

Hot Wet Cloths—In cases of deep chest colds, severe sore throat or incipient pneumonia, hot, wet towels should be used over the throat and chest to open the pores of the skin before applying Vicks.

For Head Colds, Asthma, Catarrh, Hay Fever—Vicks can be melted in a spoon and the vapors inhaled, or a little should be applied up the nostrils and snuffed up the head.

For Spasmodic Croup, Children's Colds—Rub Vicks over the throat and chest until the difficult breathing is relieved, then spread on thickly and cover with a hot flannel cloth. An application at bed time usually prevents a night attack of croup. Vicks is particularly recommended for children's colds since it is externally applied, and can, therefore, be used often and freely without disturbing the youngsters' delicate digestions.

For Deep Chest Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Bronchitis, Coughs—or any affection of the respiratory organs where there is tightness or soreness, Vicks should be applied over the throat and chest—if necessary, first using hot wet cloths—and rubbed in well until the skin is red; then spread on thickly and covered with one or two thicknesses of hot flannel cloths. If the cough is annoying, a small piece the size of a pea can be swallowed every few hours.

Minor Ailments

In addition to its use for Cold Troubles, Vicks has been found excellent as a salve, liniment or plaster for troubles such as Bites, Burns, Itchings, Soreness, Sunburn.

Now Over 17 Million Jars Are Used Yearly

The best evidence of the value of Vicks is the increasing number of families who, each year, are converted to the use of this real "Little Bodyguard in the Home."

The number of jars used annually for the last few years is:

1910	347,748 Jars
1911	523,152 Jars
1912	1,027,068 Jars
1913	1,357,590 Jars
1914	1,462,330 Jars
1915	2,418,213 Jars
1916	4,302,764 Jars
