The Story of a Honeymoon

Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARBISON

CHAPTER 547

HOW COUSIN AGATHA CUNNING-LY BLOCKED MADGE'S PLAN. Mrs. Allis! As I sat staring at the mysterious newspaper clippings ansome loganberries; farm buildings; onymously sent with the evident $150 per acre.
1 acres close in, 3 acres cherries and purpose of frightening me. and de-

I shivered with the dread the thought of her always brings me. Mrs. Allis, the woman who had driven Robert Savarin, the distinguished artist, into exile and mental darkness for 15 years; the woman Wednesday, whose plot to steal the valuable paintings the artist had given to his sister, Mrs. Cosgrove, I had thwarted while on an outing with Dicky at the Cosgrove farmhouse in the Catskill mountains; the woman who day. had tried to shatter my nerves by a relentless tracking of my movements and a mad attempt to disfigure me with acid-clippings such as these accounts of a spy's execution and a hideous Black Hand murder would be just the sort of thing she would enjoy. But only a few weeks before when Katherine Sonnot, my brother-cousn's little fiancee, had providentially saved me from hideous disfigurement at her hands. Katherine's trained eyes - she was accounted one of the best nurses in the city-had discovered that the woman was a drug addict. She had used the knowledge, together with the dread of punishment for the attempted crime to force Mrs. Allis to consent to enter a private sanatorium for infortunates where Katherine had 'he disposal of one of the rooms. Katherine and I had taken her there purselves. If she had been dismissed or had escaped, surely Ka-'herine would have been notified and would have at once gotten into comnunication with me.

There was but one thing to be done I must see Katherine at once. I didn't dare to trust to the telephone with my mother-in-law and the state of the Cousin Agatha in the house, and the No. 63 Oregonian E:16 a.m. booth in the local drug store was about as bad. I looked at my watch. If I hurried I could catch the noon train. I had in unusually large hand bag, and a sudden impulse made me put one of my crepe nighted wass, which I could fold into a very small space, and a few necessary toilet articles into it. to Katherine. I did not foresee any emergency that would keep me in the city. But might not be able to see Katherine until late, and I could easily telephone out home I was staying with her so no one would be alarmed.

I went down stairs with as casuai an air as I could manage. 1 dreaded Cousin Agatha's cat-like scrutiny, the inference I knew she would draw from my trip to town following so closely upon my receipt of the two mysterious letters. "Is there anything you want in the city, mother?" I asked Mother Graham, who sat toasting her fest before the coal grate in the dining ! room, the only fireplace we had yet been able to make draw in the house 22 we had bought. "Why! Are you going in" She anything unexpected annoys Mother Graham,-I think it does most old people. "Isn't this something sudden? Dicky didn't know you were going this morning, did he?" I wanted to smile at her early Victorian attitude, but I knew better ter than to let any hint of amusement appear even in my eyes. If I only could get away without any comment from Cousin Agatha!

of disapproval. I have learned that other day I thought I would go in rither today or tomorrow. I want to look at some draperies." Mother Graham Decides

My mother-in-law drew her feet down from the fender and arose decisively. "Fortunately, I am all dressed exept my coat and hat," she said. And I certainly want to see any draperies for this house before you purchase them. Want to go along-Agatha?" She turned with a rather grudging manner to her cousin. No, thank you." The words came from the thin lips as if they had been snipped off with sharp chears. "I'm sure dear Margarot. doesn't need or desire either your company or mine in her trip to the city, or our assistance in selecting draperies." The tone in which the words were couched was tipped with venem and plainly meant to be mysterious. I knew that she hoped my mother-inlaw would rise to her bait and demand her meaning; but either the old woman was unusually obtuse or didn't desire to gratify the other woman's maliciousness. At any rate.

she paid no attention to her and turned back to me. 'We'll have time to eat something before we go," she announced, "Teil Katle to fix us something in a jiffy." "Won't you tell her, please?" I asked. I have an errand to do before I catch the train, and I must hurry." "Going to the postoffice?" asked Cousin Agatha, and there was a malicious gleam through her half-closed lids. "Because if you are I can save you the trouble. I'm going down there myself right away."
