EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You can Bring Back Color and Lustre with Sage Tea and Sulphur

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is messy and troublesome. At little cost you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger.

The scout committee is the membership committee and its chairman is the corps scout or president of the club; the outings and innings committee is the social committee, whose chairman is the secretary of the club; and the service committee chairman is the treasurer. The three chairmen together form the "S. O. S." or executive committee and plan the monthly programs of activities and work.

The Lincoln company is divided into three groups with leaders and elected officers as follows: Ninth A: Leader, Miss Mary Fike; corps scout, Harriet Smith; outings and innings chairman, Halie Compton; service chairman, Marie Riley.

Ninth B and Eighth A and B: Leader, Miss Gladys Pemberton; corps scout, Helen Arpe; outings and innings chairman, Elizabeth Taft; service chairman, Clemma Saunders.

Seventh grade: Leader, Mrs. A. C. Bohrnstedt; corps scout, Myrtle Ship; outings and innings chairman, Alberta Bohrnstedt; service chairman, Doris Nelson.

Home Druggists and Doctors Take and Recommend Number 40 For The Blood

Mr. Theodore Gerke of The Gerke Drug Co., states: "A year or so ago my wife came into the drug store and said she was going to take a blood medicine. She looked over the bins we had on the shelf and decided to try Number 40. After taking it a while she gave it to our son and one day I was complaining of that tired feeling and she said: 'I will dose you with 40,' and she did, and it helped me so much that I have been recommending it to my customers and buy in gross lots." With scarcely an exception, druggists in Evansville and this vicinity unanimously endorse and recommend Number 40. An old and very successful physician remarked to me a short time ago on the street: "I am taking Number 40. It will prolong a man's life." Made by J. C. A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 556 WHAT HAPPENED IN THE HOUSE NEXT DOOR

Never, in all my sheltered, commonplace life, have I experienced such a romantic thrill as I did when the stealthy knock sounded upon the door of the mysterious room lined with women's costumes into which Lillian Underwood had ushered Katherine Sonnot and me through the secret passage from her library to the adjoining house. It was a passage I had not known was there, a passage of whose existence I was certain no member of her household even dreamed.

I realized, of course, by this time, as Katherine must have also, that Lillian's brilliant brain, her wonderful energy and resourcefulness must be enlisted in the secret service of her country, realized also that this service must be a matter of years. That she had trusted me sufficiently to allow me to accompany her upon this expedition, of which I began dimly to comprehend the nature, filled me with pride, with which, however, terror mingled whenever I thought of Grace Draper, whom Lillian appeared to feel so sure of finding.

Lillian opened the door promptly in answer to the knock, which was a curious one, three short staccato raps, and then drawing of the hand across the panel, and disclosed standing there a trimly built woman of middle age with an uncompromising jaw and angular face which had all the earmarks of dogged fidelity, without being remarkable for acuteness.

How Lillian Worked.

"It's all right, Mary," Lillian said reassuringly. "I just wanted you to know we were here. I'll give you the signal when we're ready to go out the entrance."

The woman looked at us suspiciously. "New ones?" she questioned. "Not exactly," Lillian returned. "I'm going to take them with me."

"Is that safe?" The question shot out with hostile intention. "I will be the judge of that," Lillian returned quickly, yet with an edge in her voice that I saw brought a flush to the other woman's face. She went away without a word, and Lillian, looking the door behind her without comment, turned to us and looked us over.

"Katherine's hair is all right," she said, "but it will have to be a wig for you, Madge. That Titian mass of yours is enough to give you away anywhere. Here—take down your hair and braid it into the smallest compass you can."

She took a new comb and brush from a case on a dresser and gave them to me. I obeyed her unquestioningly, and my hair was soon in two strands plaited so tightly as almost to bring tears to my eyes.

"Good," commented Lillian, who had been busy selecting several long coats and other garments from those hanging on the wall. "Now sit down, you and Katherine, and I'll give you each a hand."

The next few minutes were busy ones. She wound my hair tightly about my head, and put over it a wig of unobtrusive black hair. Then she went to my face, and what she did to that I had no means of knowing except that she was applying certain cosmetics to it. Then she put upon my head a rather large drooping hat which shaded my face and further shadowed it with one of the mesh veils with large embroidered figures so many women affect. Then she shrouded me in a long cloak and turned me toward a mirror.

"There," she said with relief and turned her attention to Katherine.

The New Light.

I gazed at myself in astonishment. With unerring judgment she had manipulated my costume so that I looked two inches taller, 20 pounds heavier, and infinitely older than my usual self. And yet so skillful had she been that I could not distinguish any make-up beyond the ordinary amount of rouge and powder used by many women veering toward middle age. But I would have defied Dicky himself to have recognized me unless he had been placed in a position to study me.

She made another successful transformation in Katherine, and then subjected herself to a rigid manipulation which turned her into an old woman with only her brilliant eyes to distinguish her from the ordinary aged mother of daughters who are approaching middle age.

Then she touched another bell, evidently a signal, and waited until through the room sounded an answering tinkle. "Come now," she said, "and remember, follow my lead, don't speak unless you're sure I want you to. You'll know by what I say when to talk."

She led the way downstairs and out the hall door of the house next to hers, a house which I remembered bore the sign of an employment agency, and at which I had wondered even in a neighborhood as out of date as the one in which Lillian lives. It was evidently a blind for the varying kinds of people who passed in and out its doors. She halted the first taxi she saw, gave some hurried directions, and in a few minutes stopped before the entrance of a rather disreputable-looking apartment house in a much poorer quarter than her own.

"Wait here," she said, and alighting from the taxi disappeared inside the building. (To be continued)

The After Effects of Pneumonia

This is No. 2 of a series of advertisements, prepared by a competent physician, explaining how certain diseases which attack the air passages—such as Pneumonia, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Measles or even a long continued Cold—often leave these organs in an inflamed, congested state, thus affording a favorable foothold for invading germs. And how Vick's VapoRub may be of value in this condition.

Pneumonia attacks the air cells of the lungs. An inflammation is set up and matter is thrown off which causes the air cells to solidify, thus preventing the natural flow of blood thru the lungs. This "backing up" of the blood causes the heart to pump harder, just as stepping on a hose increases the water pressure, which is the reason why, during this disease, the physician watches the overburdened heart so carefully.

After recovery the lungs are filled with a mass of wreckage—the debris of the battle—which must be gotten rid of by a process known as resolution. Frequently, inflamed spots remain, congestion persists, cough hangs on, and the least exposure brings on a cold that is hard to get rid of. If neglected, such damaged air passages may easily develop serious disease of the lungs.

Such cases should always continue under a physician's care and frequent examinations should be made to see that nature is properly continuing the rebuilding process.

Nightly applications of Vick's VapoRub will aid nature in this work. Because Vicks acts locally by stimulation thru the skin to draw out the inflammation, attract the blood away from the congested spots and relieve the cough. In addition, the medicinal ingredients of Vicks are vaporized by the body heat. These vapors are breathed in all night long, thus bringing the medication to bear directly upon the inflamed areas.

Vicks should be rubbed in over the throat and chest until the skin is red—then spread on thickly and covered with hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck and the bed clothes arranged in the form of a funnel so the vapors arising may be freely inhaled. If the cough is annoying, swallow a small bit of Vicks the size of a pea.

Samples to new users will be sent free on request to the Vick Chemical Company, 232 Broad Street, Greensboro, N. C.

The Parker Idea in Dentistry

THE Parker Idea is to spread information everywhere about the importance of good teeth, because good teeth stand for good health; —to make everything in dentistry perfectly plain to the people;

—to render to the great masses, at a moderate price, the same class of dental work that only the few could afford in the past;

—to practice dentistry according to a System such as is used in banks, trust companies and other successful business institutions;

—to conduct the dental business on a large scale, because that is the only way the cost of good dentistry can be cut down;

—to improve the lot of the dentist himself, so that he can make a better living than when he works alone;

—to take the fear of pain out of dentistry and give full satisfaction to patients;

—to put good dentistry within the reach of all.

There are twenty-four offices where the Parker Idea is carried out under the E. R. Parker System.
