The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

What an Impudent Wink Disclosed to Madge

Had Harry Underwood recognized me?

This was the question that beat against my brain as I sat, disguised by Lillian Underwood's clever fingers as a Latin-American woman in the cafe where Lillian, Katherine Sonnet and I had come in quest of Grace Draper. We had seen her enter the cafe with Harry Underwood had realized that Allan Drake was the person for whom her restless eyes had been searching, and had witnessed her dismissal of Harry Underwood, evidently in search of some one who knew Allen Drake and could introduce him to her.

And when Harry Underwood had passed our table I had forgotten to lower my eyes, and had seen in his a flash which I was afraid was that of recognition.

He had not slackened his pace, nor given any other indication that he saw in me any one save the middle-aged South American woman my appearance indicated. And, wisely or unwisely, I decided to say nothing to Lillian about my fears. For a wonder she hadn't noticed my momentary fright as his eyes met mine. As I stole a swift furtive glance at her I noticed that her underlip was caught between her teeth in a cruel grip, and that her eyes were matching the retreating back of the man for whom she had done so much, the man who was still legally her husband.

Lillian's Herself Again

I knew that there was no real love existing in Lillian Underwood's heart for the man she had married after her first tragic marital experience. She and Harry Underwood had joined their existences in a sort of friendly, comfortable compact to patch up each other's rather battered lives. But while Lillian had loyally kept her side of the bargain I knew that Harry Underwood had been anything but a loyal husband. And at last he had brutally and coldly deserted her, giving as his excuse that he could not stand the presence in their home, or rather in Lillian's, of a man whose money gave most support to their establishment—of little Marion Morton, Lillian's daughter by her first husband, from whom she had been cruelly separated for years.

But even though love was absent from Lillian's heart, she had been the faithful wife, the true comrade of the man who had just passed her, going to do the bidding of the beautiful creature he had brought to the cafe, who had evidently come with him from South America. I knew what bitter humiliation was Lillian's portion, guessed also that something more than humiliation was stirring her heart.

For if Lillian's suspicions were true and Grace Draper were a secret agent of our country's enemies, it was most probable that Harry Underwood also had become the most despicable of all things, a traitor to the land of his birth. And Lillian, who was high in a service safeguarding our country. It might become her duty to track down the man whose name she bore. No wonder even her brave heart faltered at the possibility.

It wasn't in Lillian to falter more than an instant, however. In another moment she was herself, and when Harry Underwood again passed our table in animated conversation with a man of about his own age, there was not the flicker of an eyelash on her part, nor I flatter myself, on mine, at his proximity.

"I don't know the chap myself," I heard Harry Underwood's familiar deep tones rumble as he passed us, "but the little lady's got an idea that he's somebody some friend told her to look up, and nothing will do her but to meet him."

"I shall be most pleased," the other man assured him, and then they had reached the table and Grace Draper was smiling an acknowledgment of the introduction Harry Underwood made.

I watching Allen Drake, saw him start imperceptibly, and then into those keen gray eyes there flashed a look which held mirth in it I was very sure. It was only a flash I caught, for the next instant the womanish eyelashes veiled his eyes again and he went on with the conversation with his companions. But that he knew as well as Grace Draper herself the plan she had made to meet him I was sure.

Harry Underwood's Eyes She managed the thing very well, however, I was forced to admit, and so did the man Harry Underwood had brought to their table. For a good 10 minutes he appeared absorbed in the conversation of the beautiful woman at his side. Then, carelessly raising his eyes, he caught sight of Allen Drake, and his start of recognition was admirably done.

It was but a few moments after this that Allen Drake was standing beside Grace Draper's table, talking in his indolent but attentive manner to her, while she, I could see, was using all her battery of feminine charms in her effort to interest him. I was so absorbed in watching them that I did not realize that I was myself being watched. And then I caught Harry Underwood's malicious eyes full upon me, and saw him drop his left eyelid in an impudent wink.

CHURCH ADOPTS AN ORPHAN REPUBLIC WILL FEED AND SEND IT TO SCHOOL

New Era Is Promised To Paraguay Now, Under The Direction of Missionaries.

At last the barefoot republic has been adopted.

Oppressed by its masters, battered and beaten by its neighbors for centuries, it has been a walf among the nations. No one sent it to school. It remained ignorant, weak with the unaided struggle for existence, and poverty stricken. About it lay wealth it did not know how to use.

The "Barefoot Republic" is Paraguay. And its new foster parent is the American Protestant denomination of the Disciples of Christ.

War with Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay ravaged the "Barefoot Republic" as only Armenia and Serbia have been ravaged. From a population of 1,250,000 it was reduced to 300,000, of which only 10,000 were men. Jaguars prowled the streets and every other animal that might be used for food were slaughtered almost to extinction.

This is the background to the story of the "Barefoot Republic" today as told in the Interchurch World Movement's survey of Paraguay's economic, social and religious condition. This is part of a world-survey to provide a practical program for the closer co-operation of the Protestant Churches of America.

The "Barefoot Republic" has done its best to recover, the survey shows. The government distributed tracts of land to encourage agriculture. But Paraguay knows no modern farm implements. The machete still is used to clear the land: the hoe to till it. Even the primitive plow of the Egyptians is an innovation. Paraguay has much latent wealth in its climate, soil and cattle ranches. Its orange groves are hoards of gold. Yet the survey reports, every year enough oranges rot on the ground in Paraguay to pay the national debt if they could be marketed.

English missionaries have reached a few centers among the wild Indians in the tropical wilderness. The Salvation Army and one other mission have done work in two or three of the cities. But a new era in the history of the republic is promised in its adoption by the Disciples of Christ. Already they have sent their first missionaries. They have purchased a two-acre site in the heart of Here is to be set up their school in the "Barefoot Republic" a chance. And institutional work.

With schools, with plows, with modern facilities for social and commercial life, the Disciples plan in the next five years to give the "Barefoot Republic" a chance. Ten day schools, a high school, an agricultural school and an industrial school are to be operated. An orphanage is to be built. And there are to be two institutional church centers, eight churches and eight out-stations.

The walf of the nations has found a helping hand to prosperity and economic independence.

Police Schedule Similar. Citizens Eager for Paving. Numerous petitions for improvements were received last night. The property owners of North High street, north of Union street, petitioned for the re-grading of the street.

Property owners of Division street petitioned for the paving of that street from Front street to Winter street, waiving their right to 10 days' publication. Petitions were received for the paving of North Sixteenth from D street to Market and of Trade street from Church to High. Petitions also came in for the paving of North Summer street, the property owners waiving the right of remonstrance, and for the paving of Fourth street from Belmont to Pine. The opening of Fourth street also was asked. All petitions were referred to the street committee. Petitions for the paving of several alleys were also received.

"I don't know how we are going to pave all these streets and alleys when we have no men to do it with," said Alderman Bucher.

Accidents Too Frequent. A resolution was introduced and adopted asking the mayor to appoint a committee to work with the chief of police relative to enlisting the services of voluntary traffic officers so that street traffic accidents may be curbed.

Resolutions were adopted declaring the intention of the council to improve Division street from Front to Water street and to improve Lincoln street.

A recommendation signed by Ward K. Richardson and others was received from the North Salem Improvement association urging that hereafter all sidewalks built in the city be of cement instead of wood. It was referred to the street committee.

The association further called attention to 10 blocks of wood sidewalks in the North Salem district that need repaving.

A communication was received from W. I. Staley offering to make the annual audit of the books of the city treasurer and the city recorder for a compensation of $150. The council voted to enter into a contract with Mr. Staley.

Giesy's Voice Heard. An ordinance was introduced providing for readjusting the grade of Church street from Highland to Hickory and was referred to the street committee. An ordinance was introduced and referred to increase the salary of the city health officer from $500 to $900 a year.

Simeral moved that the city attorney draw an ordinance for introduction at the next meeting to increase the salary of the city engineer from $125 to $150 a month. The motion carried.

John B. Giesy made his maiden speech as a member of the aldermanic body by moving that the council instruct the street committee to make passable Mill street between Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets. He said an emergency exists. The motion prevailed.

500,000 Fords Turned Out in Period of Six Months

When the first six months of the Ford Motor company fiscal year ended January 31st, more than half a million of the sturdy little Fords had left the factory to join their three- and a half million brothers and sisters on the world's highways. And Ford officials express confidence in their ability to turn loose the other half million by July 31st, when their year ends.

However, they say a million a year is far from the ultimate in motor car manufacturing; and that with the completion of the big blast furnace and body plants which Henry Ford is now building in Detroit, the yearly output capacity is bound to assume larger dimensions. The present capacity is 1,200,000. The blast furnace project on which

Mr. Ford has been working for the past three years will enable the Ford company to make Ford parts direct from the iron ore instead of buying the iron ingots and then melting them. At the present time there are approximately 15,000 men engaged at the blast furnaces and in the new body plant. But it is quite probable that that number will be more than doubled once the steel mills—which will be the largest in America—begin to operate. Ford men do not attempt to place any estimate on what the production of cars will be in the future, but point to the fact that they have not been able to supply the demand for the past ten years and that at the present time there are some 230,000 unfilled orders on file.
