REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 570

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN KATHERINE FACED HER OLD FRIEND.

"Why! Anna Berg! Wherever did you drop from? I had no idea you were in New York."

Katherine Sonnot's assumption of surprise was perfect as she advanced toward the tall nurse masquerading under the name of Miss Burke in Lillian Underwood's household, and who, we strongly suspected, was an agent of the Prussian secret service, sent to spy upon Lillian.

Katherine had caught a glimpse of her earlier in the afternoon, and had promptly told Lillian that the woman had gone to training school with her, and while there had borne the name of Berg. She had also said that her English had then been broken, and her criticisms of this country very pronounced. Lillian had arranged to have Katherine confront the woman in the hall, as she was returning from her walk, and had also directed the government operatives next door to shadow the nurse when she should have left the house.

The nurse drew herself up and looked at Katherine coldly.

"I am afraid you have mistaken me for some one else," she said in icily courteous, finely modulated tones. "My name is not Anna Berg, but Mary Burke."

"Oh, come now, Anna," Katherine returned merrily. "You cannot fool me this way. You were always a great one for practical jokes in training school. Of course, you remember Katherine Sonnot, 'the little mouse' you used to call me in the old days in the hospital."

A Firm Denial.

"I am sorry to disappoint you," the nurse returned firmly, "but the friend you speak of must bear a remarkable resemblance to me. I must reiterate, however, that my name is Burke, and that I have never seen you before in my life."

She stared coldly, insolently at Katherine, who returned her gaze

Cocoon Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Multisified Cocoon oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Multisified cocoon oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

unflinchingly. And then Lillian struck in:

"You will pardon me, Miss Burke, or Berg, but I cannot doubt the evidence of my friend's eyesight. She tells me that you used to be called Anna Berg, and that at that time you spoke exceedingly broken English, and were continually comparing this country to your own, with reflections upon ours. You can readily see that such information lays you under grave suspicion."

"I am not accustomed to have my word questioned," began the nurse haughtily.

"And you will doubtless see the impropriety of remaining in a house where it is doubted," Lillian countered smoothly. "I will, of course, pay you for the entire week. But I should prefer that you leave within the next half-hour."

The woman opened her mouth to protest, then turned toward her room.

"As you please," she said.

"You will pardon me if I go with you while you pack," Lillian said.

And then the woman, unable to restrain the venom in her nature, turned upon Lillian and hissed one German word that Lillian did not record.

"I thought so," Lillian said quietly. "Madge, you stay here, and Katherine come with me. I don't trust this wild cat. And kindly remember, Miss Berg, or whatever your name is, that I always have with me a little pistol that makes no sound, and which I should not hesitate to use if it were necessary."

What Madge "Saw."

I shivered as if with cold at Lillian's tone. It was grim, relentless. I knew that she meant exactly what she said, and it gave me a glimpse of a side of my friend of which I had seen slight traces before. Evidently she would stop at nothing if her duty to her country were involved.

But the idea of her carrying so deadly a weapon concealed about her chilled me with a dread that had its roots in one of the queer uncanny forebodings which come to me sometimes, and that so often are realized. I wonder sometimes, and then laugh at myself for the wonder, whether I am not psychic in these queer glimpses into the future which are sometimes vouchsafed me.

But at any rate, as Lillian and Katherine followed the blackly scowling nurse down the corridor, leaving me alone in the library, there flashed before my eyes a picture which faded almost as quickly as it came, but that gripped me with its realism so I almost cried out in fright.

It was a vision of Lillian shrouded in black, looking down in horror at some huddled, shapeless thing at her feet. In one hand, dropped nervelessly to her side, was clasped the tiny silencer pistol to which she referred. And all around her, horrible leering figures were pointing accusing fingers at her shrinking form.

As the vision faded I took a firm grip on my nerves. No matter if the thing I had seen meant grief or danger for the friend of my heart at some future time there was not time either now or then for indulging in nervous tremors. She had trusted me to guard the secrets of her library. I vowed solemnly to myself in the shadows of the wonderful brown-toned room that neither now nor at any future time would I fail Lillian Underwood.

After Whooping Cough—What?

This is No. 4 of a series of advertisements, prepared by a competent physician, explaining how certain diseases which attack the air passages—such as Pneumonia, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Measles or even a long continued Cold—often leave these organs in an inflamed, congested state, thus affording a favorable foothold for invading germs. And how Vicks' Vapo-Rub may be of value in this condition.

Whooping cough is the "meanest" disease that childhood is heir to. While rarely fatal in itself, except to children under two years of age, still it hangs on so long—the coughing paroxysms are so violent, preventing proper sleep and digestion—that when the disease does disappear it leaves the child weakened and run down. In addition the violent coughing racks and strains the air passages and after recovery this irritation frequently remains.

During this period of convalescence the child should be most carefully watched until full strength is restored and the air passages regain their normal tone. A prominent authority even goes so far as to say—"There is more criminal neglect in connection with whooping cough than with any other disease."

While the disease is active, Vicks' Vapo-Rub usually helps to lessen the violence of the coughing, but it is during convalescence that Vicks is most valuable. Because Vicks acts locally by stimulation thru the skin to draw out the inflammation, attract the blood away from the congested spots and relieve the cough. In addition the medicinal ingredients of Vicks are vaporized by the body heat. These vapors are breathed in all night long, thus bringing the medication to bear directly upon the inflamed areas.

Vicks should be rubbed in over the throat and chest until the skin is red—then spread on thickly and covered with hot flannel cloths. Leave the clothing loose around the neck and the bed clothes arranged in the form of a funnel so the vapors arising may be freely inhaled. If the cough is annoying swallow a small bit the size of a pea.

Children's digestions are delicate—easily disturbed by too much "dosing." Vicks, therefore, is particularly recommended, since it is externally applied and so can be used often and freely without the slightest harmful effects.

Samples to new users will be sent free on request to the Vicks Chemical Company, 234 Broad Street, Greensboro, N. C.
