

Violet Heming and original New York cast in "Three Faces East" at Grand Opera House, Monday, April 19.

Coming to the Grand Opera House Monday, April 19, is Anthony Paul Kelly's mystery play with the spy theme, "Three Faces East." This most delightful gripping melodrama held New York audiences spellbound for several months at the Cohan & Harris theatre, and it highly successful run was interrupted only and brought to a finish by mid-summer heat. It must be understood, however, that the weather did not keep the people from packing the house from gallery to floor for the final week was the largest of the engagement in a financial way for the reason that the scale of prices were increased for the final performances. The season was brought to a close for the very human reason that the players themselves required a rest after their long consecutive appearance in this, the best of thrillers. Cohan & Harris have always born a reputation for consideration and courtesy to the members of their numerous business enterprises and when last summer's thermometer began soaring above the 90 degree mark and remaining there, these gen-men decided they preferred to give their players a much needed rest rather than look forward to the garnering of more shekels. "Three Faces East" is a story of the secret service, and tells in a most interesting way, of the inner working of the spy system. It takes its title from the pass-word of a band of German spies all working under the master mind of one, Franz Boelke, their chief. Boelke and his cohorts meet as antagonists some of the shrewdest minds of the British secret service who finally bring one same Boelke to earth. It is in this mass of plots, double-crossing and unusual dramatic situations that the audience follows the exploits of first one and then another of the characters, believing each in turn to be friend or foe. The final cleanup however, does not occur till just before the final curtain. Violet Heming, who created the leading feminine role at Heisene will be seen here together with Charles Harbury, Marion Gray, Frank Westerton, Frank Sheridan, William Jeffrey and several others.

MR. HAWLEY'S RECORD SHOWN

Concise Statement Is Prepared for Publication in Voters' Pamphlet

With the signature of W. J. Cullver, Ronald C. Glover, Helen M. Southwick and Mary S. Moores, all of Salem, and F. M. French of Albany attached, the pamphlet statement in behalf of Representative W. C. Hawley has been filed with the secretary of state. The statement is a concise resume of the more important work that has been accomplished by Mr. Hawley since he has represented the first Oregon district in congress.

The statement follows in full: "In presenting Hon. W. C. Hawley as a candidate for congress, we are submitting to the voters a native of Oregon who has proven himself to be an industrious, capable, effective and faithful public servant and statesman.

Ideals Are Progressive
"He favors progressive legislation generally, promoting the welfare of the people, preserving their rights and increasing their prosperity; is thoroughly in accord with the progressive spirit of the age; he favors adjusting the compensation and protecting the interests of ex-service men and women and their dependants; adequate pensions for veterans, their widows and dependants; providing a great merchant marine; public improvements and developments; exclusion of undesirable immigration; thorough control of corporations, eliminating harmful activities but fostering useful activities; proper protection of dairying industry; passage of American vessels through the Panama canal toll-free; aeroplane protection of forests; adequate compensation for federal employees; extension of rural credits system; prudent economy in public expenditures with consequent reduction of taxation; repeal of legislation, necessary in war but not in peace; extending area subject to state taxation; extending area and making better condition for homesteader and in general all legislation upbuilding the state and nation, and promoting the public welfare."

ANNOUNCEMENT

AS TO MARKET CONDITIONS

We have saved our customers thousands of dollars by anticipating the market and buying ahead of the gradual increasing prices. During this time we have advised our customers to buy shoes ahead to avoid paying a higher price and they have done so, making large savings in each instance.

Now we feel that the peak of the market has been reached and we are going to suggest that our customers and friends only buy for their immediate needs, wearing the shoes they have and having them repaired. There will be no immediate reduction of any great importance but there will be a gradual decline for the next four or five years. We are also going to warn our customers against worthless shoes that are being placed on the market at this time at slightly reduced prices, all buyers of shoes should demand a positive guarantee on every pair they buy to protect themselves against these wild cat makers. We are only buying shoes from factories that absolutely stand behind every pair of shoes they make and that we have proved through years of selling experience.
