League of Nations To Take Question of Disarmament

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Necessity of deciding whether disarmament proceedings of the league of nations are to be conducted by military men directly or by civilians with the military officials of each member nation as technical advisers will face the council of the league when it assembles this month at Rome. Appointment of the permanent armament commission to advise the council, which is to be taken up at Rome, must be preceded in the view of league officials, by announcement of policy on this point.

Under article IX of the league of nations covenant, the permanent armament commission is to be charged with advising the council on armament matters. As now projected, the duties of the commission would be divided specially into a number of phases to deal with each point mentioned in the covenant articles. Part of its function would be to conduct "the full and frank exchange" of military and naval information provided for.

It is hoped by those arranging the program, it is understood, that definite plans can be prepared for submission at the first meeting of the assembly of the league in regard to permissible armaments for nations seeking membership and also regarding the exchange of military information by members.

MARY C. CLINE PASSES BEYOND

Woman Who Was Pioneer in Canning Industry Answers Last Call

Mary C. Cline was a pioneer in the canning business of Oregon. Her father was one of the earliest of the Oregon pioneers. He was William Greenwood, who came here in 1847 and took up a 642-acre donation land claim on Howell prairie.

It was at Central Howell, on this donation land claim, that Mary C. Cline conducted her cannery. She made a specialty of canned corn, and it was a good product, and the cans were of large size, as remembered by George P. Litchfield, still a resident of Salem, who was in the grocery business then, where Gardner & Keene now have their jewelry store.

This was in the late seventies; probably 1876, and surely during 1877 and 1878.

John G. Wright, now the commissary at the state hospital (asylum for the insane), was also in the grocery business in Salem then—a few doors north of the Statesman office. He no doubt also sold the canned goods put up by Mrs. Cline. But Mr. Wright could not be seen yesterday, because he was celebrating his birthday by a trip up the Columbia Highway, being taken by Dr. Prince Byrd in his automobile. Mr. Wright was 83 years young yesterday—and still going strong.

Mrs. Cline employed 50 to 60 girls in her pioneer cannery, and she also hired a number of Chinese laborers to raise raw products for her cannery.

sort of introduction to the real news item that brings it forth.

Mrs. Cline died at Lemoore, Cal., in Kings county, near the shores of Tulare lake, on May 1. Her age was past 90. Her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Reed, died at the same place on April 24, aged about 65.

Mrs. Reed was the widow of Col. C. A. Reed, who built Reed's Opera house in Salem—the building that is now known as the McCormack block, mainly occupied by the Miller department store. That was in the seventies. In the early eighties Mrs. Cline conducted a rooming house in that building, in the rooms that were not used for opera house purposes. That was the only theater in Salem for many years. The building passed to the ownership of the late E. P. McCormack, who largely rebuilt it.

Nellie Cline-Aldrich-Walt was a daughter of Mary C. Cline. She went to Lemoore several weeks ago to be at the bedside of her mother and sister, and will remain there for the present.

Lewis P. Aldrich, with the Ladd & Bush bank, is a grandson of the pioneer cannery woman. Mrs. Walter Buchner of Salem, a cousin of Mr. Aldrich, is a granddaughter.

Mrs. Cline and her daughter, Mrs. Reed, had been living together at Lemoore.

Print Paper Investigators Find Four Profiteer Brokers

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Members of the print paper investigating committee said that while the testimony had shown cases of profiteering in paper by some brokers, in their opinion profiteer activities had not seriously affected the market prices but that the situation was largely due to the failure of production to meet increased demands.

While the executive session was in progress a number of small publishers at a separate hearing conducted by Senator McNary, Republican, Oregon, recommended acquisition by the government of the surplus paper supply and its relation to the newspapers of the country.

William Page of the Waterbury (Conn.) Republic, told the committee that about 100 publishers are to meet in Washington on May 17 for the purpose of forming a league to cope with the paper situation.
