The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 589

WHY THE LONELINESS OF THE COUNTRY TROUBLES MADGE.

I was shaking all over with nervous fear when I finally found myself alone after Dicky's proposal to change the wrist watch he had given me for one with a luminous dial.

The watch I wore was not the one he had given me, but a watch with a case specially designed and substituted by Lillian, for the safe keeping of the secret paper my father had sent to her from South America. The consciousness that I had deliberately enjoyed my husband into believing my reluctance to take off the watch was due to love for his gift, contributed as much to my nervous tremors as did my conviction that the watch, despite Lillian's assertion, was not a safe place for the secret of the paper.

Dicky's fondness for setting, winding up and otherwise tinkering with time-pieces is almost an obsession. His mother has told me numberless stories of his exploits in taking apart the family clocks, and incidentally failing to put them together again; failures, however, that never discouraged him. I knew it was only a question of days before he would examine the watch I wore, if it were for nothing more than to compare its time with his own. Once in his hands, I feared he would discover its secret.

What Madge Decided.

As I looked back to the night when Lillian planned the substitution of the watches, I wondered why I hadn't told her of this propensity of Dicky's if indeed she did not already know of it. But I knew the answer, even as I put the mental query. Lillian is so forceful, so brilliant, that she overawes me a bit, and I never dream of questioning her judgment.

But here was an instance in which I had no choice. I must get to the city and secure my own watch as soon as possible. I would carry the paper with me, and decide with Lillian what was to be done after getting there.

I dressed hastily, but found that in spite of my hurry, I couldn't make the train I had planned to take, but must wait two hours for another one. Restless, I wandered out into the grounds surrounding the house we had purchased, which were just beginning to show traces of an unusually belated springtime.

Jim touched his hat respectfully from where he stood beside a cold frame in which the tender green of young plants was showing.

"Katie tells me you have enlisted, Jim," I said. "I want you to know that I am very proud of your decision, and that I will take care of Katie while you are away. When do you go?"

Who Is Near?

"I don't just know," Jim fumbled his cap awkwardly. "They told me not to get out of reach, and they will let me know. So I'm trying to fix things up as well as I can while I have the chance. I don't know who you can get to take care of things," he added, worriedly.

"Don't worry about anything, Jim," I returned. "We'll manage somehow."

"Thank you for everything, Mrs. Graham," he said earnestly, and there was that in his honest voice which told me how deeply he felt my promise to take care of Katie.

As I strolled on through the garden where Jim had been trying to repair the ravages of years of neglect, and entered a small piece of woodland on the edge of the small lake at the rear of the property, I was struck with the loneliness of the place.

The ground surrounding the house together with those of our nearest neighbor, Mrs. Durkee, are bounded at the back by the little natural lake which had been one of the chief reasons for our taking the place, and which Dicky had great plans for beautifying.

On the other side of the lake stretches a piece of woodland belonging to a real estate company that will in time "develop" it, but which now is simply a tangle of trees and underbrush.

The place adjoining on the north is one belonging to a wealthy widow who spends most of her time traveling, and her home is closed during her absence. This fact appealed to Dicky, who doesn't like neighbors too near, and I had agreed with him at the time we bought the place. Of course there are neighbors across the road, and the place isn't far from the center of the rambling old village, which spreads out in all directions. But our house is set back from the street, and shielded by trees and by shrubbery; a sudden realization of the ease with which marauders could enter the grounds unhindered disturbed me.

I had always felt a certain security in the knowledge that Jim's sturdy arms and strong body were beneath my roof. But now he was going to the war, and with apprehension I

Professor Peck Comments on Capital City Lawns

Salem lawns were complimented for their color effects, but criticized adversely because of their lack of shrubbery, in a lecture by Professor Arthur W. Peck of Corvallis before the Salem Floral society at the public library last night. Professor Peck is connected with Oregon Agricultural college and came here on invitation of the floral society for last night's address.

The society adopted a resolution urging the motion picture theaters of Salem to run slides advertising "clean-up" week.

Commercial Club Officials Are in Demand as Speakers

The Salem Commercial club is doing constructive work these days, along the lines of leadership and development generally of this whole valley and this whole state.

The principal speaker at the luncheon in Portland on Thursday of the Progressive Business Men's club of that city was L. J. Chapin, one of the leaders in Salem Commercial club work. It was an agricultural program, and Mr. Chapin spoke on the "Present Conditions and Future Needs of Agriculture in the Willamette valley."

Last night Secretary T. E. McCroskey of the Salem Commercial club and Mr. Chapin were in Albany, helping the commercial club of that city to put over a membership campaign.

Mr. McCroskey and Mr. Chapin have assisted commercial clubs in nearly all of the cities and towns in the Salem district to get onto their feet, or to organize, and all this constructive work means great things for Salem and all this section.

Most Effective and Economical
An expert pharmacist says that the best treatment he knows of for those whose blood is poor, nerves are weak, livers torpid, or whose systems are generally run down, is: Hood's Sarsaparilla before eating, Peptiron after eating, and Hood's Pills as necessary.

The ingredients of these medicines are indicated, he says, in most cases of blood impurities, nervousness, paleness, constipation, and are prescribed every day by physicians in preparations whose formulas are similar to those of Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron and Hood's Pills, but these already prepared medicines so combine them as to have superlative merit and to be the most effective and economical preparations in which to take them.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, Peptiron and Hood's Pills are products of the C. I. Hood Co., Lowell, Mass., and form their Triple Combination Treatment.
