CHAPTER 590

WHAT MADGE THOUGHT ABOUT WHILE WILLIAM TRUMBULL TALKED.

William Trumbull—for it was he whose footsteps in the woodland had so alarmed me—stood twisting his cap and bowing as I turned abruptly toward him. He had evidently tried very hard to make his pitifully threadbare clothing look respectable, and his face wore an anxious look even through the broad smile which overspread it. At his heels was a bull terrier who had once been white and still showed a good strain even through the general dinginess of his appearance.

"How'd'ye, Mis' Gramie?" This was William's salutation, and I was so relieved to find his honest if rather repulsive face looking into mine, instead of some unknown perhaps dangerous person, that I put extra warmth into my greeting of the poor old chap.

"How do you do, William?" I said cordially. "I haven't seen you since the day you helped us move. I hope you've been well. Is this your dog?"

William is like a child in his delight at any one noticing him or his belongings. He gave a short low whistle, and the dog jumped to him, and put both paws upon his body, looking up into his eyes anxiously.

"I guess you ain't never seed Pete, have you, Mis' Gramie?" he asked. "Here, Pete, rool over for the lady."

"I Suppose So."

The dog looked up at his master

as if in mute protest at having to do a trick better fitted for a poodle than a dignified bull terrier, but William was insistent, and Pete rolled over obediently.

"Now shake hands," William commanded.

But at this I interposed, for I was dressed for my journey to the city, even to my gloves, and the dog was decidedly dirty.

"Don't make him do that, William," I said hastily. "Pete is too dignified a dog to do silly little tricks. Is he your dog? Where have you kept him?" I knew that if William's attention was diverted for a moment I was safe from his demonstrations of his dog's trick ability. Poor old William cannot manage but one idea at a time.

"Yes, Mis' Gramie, he's my dog," the old fellow returned proudly. "I've had him ever since he was a puppy. Feller that was working on one of these big estates give him to me, said his mother was a bench dog. But I ain't had no place to keep him reg'lar. This last winter the butcher let him stay back of his place, but he wasn't very good to him, used to kick him around, and Pete isn't used to that, be you."

The dog gave a short bark and wagged his tail, his eyes fixed adoringly on William. Evidently to one faithful canine soul, William Trumbull, the derelict, was a hero.

"Jim, he told me he was goin' to war." This was William's next contribution to the conversation. He tried to make the observation casually, but there was an anxious ring in his voice, and I saw his near-sighted eyes peering up at me for William, while possessing immense strength, is almost a dwarf in stature. At once the meaning of his seemingly casual encounter with me flashed upon me, but I resolved to let him introduce the subject himself.

"Yes, he's going soon," I replied non-committally as William paused, evidently awaiting an answer.

"Well, now, Mis' Gramie, what you goin' to do for a man around the place when Jim goes?"

"I hadn't thought about it, William."

"But you can't get along here without a man," he argued. "Mr. Gramie, he can't take no care of a place, and then he'll be goin' too, most likely, won't he?"

Again the stab! Even this poor old wail expected that Dicky would soon join the ranks of his country's defenders.

"I suppose so," I said faintly.

Well Recommended.

"Well, then," triumphantly, "there's just no two ways about it, you ought to have a man on the premises. And me and Pete can come just as well as not. Pete, he's an awful good watch dog, there can't nobody step foot nowhere on the place when Pete's around but what he hears 'em. An' just let me tell you, Mis' Gramie, there hadn't nobody need ever try to monkey with Pete. Just look at that jaw of his, 'punchin' jay,' the feller hat gave him to me said it was."

He pulled back the upper lip of the dog, and showed a row of glateening teeth in a protruding jaw that looked capable of taking care of any enemy, no matter how dangerous.

The thought crossed my mind that, associated with Lillian in the secret service work as I was, with the probability of having entrusted to me many important documents, it would be a very good thing to have such strength and faithfulness as that of Pete and his master keeping guard over this lonely home of mine.

Bishop Newton says of a burning hell, "Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness." Come and hear the bible on this great question.

Summer Lake District Asks Approval of Bonds

Percy A. Cupper, state engineer, has before him for approval plans and specifications for the Summer Lake irrigation district of Lake county, which cover approximately 6000 acres of land lying north of Summer lake and the development of which will cost approximately $230,000.

The project contemplates the construction of an earth fill dam from 30 to 50 feet high for the purpose of diverting water from Ana river, which is composed of five large springs, into the distributing system, and for the development power with which to pump water the high land canal.

Humors Come to the Surface the spring as in no other sea. They don't run themselves all that way, however, but mostly arilla removes them, wards off danger, makes good health sure.

"THE GYPSY TRAIL"

Artificial Teeth Skillfully Made

WHEN you get a set of artificial teeth there is but one thing worth considering, and that is satisfaction. A cheap set, made on the factory plan, will cause endless worry, embarrassment and suffering. Plates that do not fit are little better than no teeth at all.

In offices using the E. R. Parker System are skilled dentists who make artificial teeth exclusively. They do this work exceptionally well because they specialize upon it. The plates they make are guaranteed to fit and to wear for years.

Particular skill is employed to make artificial teeth look natural, and to fit so comfortably and snugly that you can eat and laugh and talk without revealing that your natural teeth are gone.

The price for these satisfactory plates is moderate. You are invited to call and have an examination of your mouth made without charge.

Huffman Trucks

Capacity 5500
f. o. b. Salem, $1995.00

THE "HUFFMAN"

is the single achievement for 1920. It is the greatest motor truck value of the year. Its great over-powered, heavy duty construction in a 5500 pound capacity truck has made it leap into amazing popularity. Everywhere it is the subject of practically every motor truck conversation because it sets a new standard in value.

Truck buyers who have been accustomed to paying $2500 to $3000 for trucks are now buying the "Huffman" because it is absolutely the lowest priced truck for its carrying capacity and high grade standard units in the world.

Never before has $1995 bought so much actual "Dollar for Dollar" truck value.
