SALEM DISTRICT SHOULD PRODUCE MORE CABBAGE

The Salem Slogan subject of The Statesman of this week is Cabbage.

It has not been possible to get a great deal of enthusiasm from local growers. They have been discouraged by three dry years, and more especially by the high wages of farm labor.

It takes work to grow cabbage. And it takes moisture to give a good start to a crop that will produce 18 to 25 tons of late cabbage to the acre—

Which is possible in the Salem district. The time is coming when there will be a great deal more attention paid to drainage in this district, on a large scale, and on a small scale, too.

Then the time is coming, too, when there will be a good deal of artificial irrigation here.

That may sound like a far cry to some of the old timers—for Oregon has been referred to in the past, disrespectfully in most cases, as the Webfoot State.

But it is now the Beaver State; and the beaver is one of the most industrious of all the animals.

With good drainage and without irrigation in a normal season, and with irrigation in a dry summer season, accompanied by good head work and hard labor, there are tens of thousands of acres of land in the Salem district that may be counted upon to produce 18 to 25 tons of late cabbage to the acre in any given year.

And this should be done.

There are three markets—the local market, for the cabbage direct from the farms; and this is growing with our population and with the larger use of salads in the dietary of our people, which is important. The local market is supplemented at all times by the shipping market, to supply the demand in other cities and sections.

Then, secondly, there is the dehydration market. The Salem King's Products Co., owning the local dehydration plant, has lately given up the use of cabbage in their combination soup stock. They think they can make a more suitable and marketable article without cabbage. But cabbage is a good product for dehydration—and there will be a demand in the future for large supplies for dehydration—straight cabbage.

Lastly, the big market, and the one that will persist, is for sauer kraut, or sour kraut, or Viorty cabbage—or whatever you want to call it. The product is all the same—and it originated in France, not in Germany.

The world will never get tired of sauer kraut. There are districts in the Mississippi Valley States that are given over almost completely to the cabbage industry for sauer kraut. There has been a good deal of sauer kraut made in Salem in the past.

There will be none made this year, on a large commercial scale, perhaps.

In order to build up a large sauer kraut industry in Salem, cabbage must be had at around $12 to $16 a ton.

In the past, $3 to $4 a ton only has been realized by Eastern growers in some districts; and the cabbage growers persisted and made profits.

So our people must raise more cabbage, and a sauer kraut industry must be built up here. And our farmers and manufacturers may be depended upon to bring this construction about, on an enduring basis. Perhaps lower farm wages will be necessary; or perhaps better methods will do it. But it must be done, in some way.

Every city gardener in Salem knows this is a good cabbage district; for he knows that, in a small plot, he has raised cabbage that would go 18 to 25 tons to an acre—if his small plot were spread to an acre.

Next week's Salem Slogan subject will be Poultry and Pet Stock. This is a good poultry district. The Slogan editor thinks he can prove it. But The Statesman would like to hear from every one who can help; from every one who can get down to brass tacks, with concrete facts, to prove that there is money in poultry—and pet stock.

WE'LL MAKE YOUR DOLLARS WORTH 103 CENTS

THINK of that. Doesn't that sound like a "get-rich-quick" scheme in these days when the purchasing power of the dollar is only about 50 cents?

Well here's the secret. All you do is deposit those dollars in a Savings Account here at the United States National Bank for one year and the interest added to the principal becomes 103 cents. Both easy and profitable, isn't it.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

Glorious rain. Will help our crops. Two years ago tomorrow, the American doughboys scored their first victory at Cantigny. Seems longer than that, to some of them.

The Salem slogan editor claims he has proved that the Salem district can be made a great cabbage district.

It is admitted, however, that it will take men who are not cabbage heads.

Mr. Taft will be with us Saturday. He cannot be honored too much. He is one of the very greatest men of his time.

The slogan subject for next week is poultry and pet stock.

If you can get down to brass tacks with hard, cold facts and figures to prove that this is the best poultry district in the world, the Salem slogan editor wants to hear from you. Moreover, it is your patriotic duty to report.

Loss of Appetite is also loss of vitality. To recover appetite and the rest take Hood's Sarsaparilla—that strengthens the stomach, perfects digestion, makes eating a pleasure. It also makes the blood rich and pure, and steadies the nerves.

ALMOST BLIND AND A CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM, NUMBER 40 GIVES RELIEF

Read the following unsolicited testimonial from Mrs. W. F. Smith, box 592, Murphysboro, Ill.: "My daughter was almost blind from cornitis (inflammation of the eyes) had inflammatory rheumatism so bad she had to go on crutches. The doctors gave her up, so we tried change of climate, but nothing did her any good. I read an advertisement of Number 40 For The Blood and decided to try it. After taking the second bottle she was much improved. She has now taken five bottles, her eyes have both cleared and her limbs are sound and well, and she has not the least symptoms of the trouble returning. My father, 65 years of age, was an invalid for nine years with rheumatism, is now taking his fifth bottle, can get around as good as anybody, and says he feels 15 years younger since taking Number 40. My daughter's case has opened the eyes of quite a number of sufferers from rheumatism, as well as myself, who believe 40 the best medicine on earth." 40 is demanded in chronic inflammation of mucous membranes; in chronic rheumatism, catarrh, eczema, skin eruptions, constipation, indigestion, stomach, liver and kidney disorders. Made by J. C. Mendenhall, Evansville, Ind., 40 years a druggist. Sold by Perry's drug store.
