

SOCIETY

By RUTH LENORE FISHER

THE lawn social for the members of St. Paul's Episcopal church to be held this evening at the rectory will be a delightful gathering for a large number of Salem folk. All fresco affairs are most popular now coming so refreshing after the heat of the days and the one tonight bids fair to be especially enjoyable.

The Misses Bertha Sproat and Georgia Nelson of Pasadena, Cal., arrived in Salem yesterday and are visiting at the home of their aunt, Mrs. E. E. Waters and at the W. T. Stolz home when they and the guests of Miss Nina McNary and Mrs. Stolz, Mrs. Stolz is also entertaining Miss Mary McIntyre of Oregon City.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Richards of Portland returned to their home yesterday after spending a few days with Mrs. J. D. Reigleman in this city.

Dr. and Mrs. B. F. Pound, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Savage, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Hathaway, and daughter Janez, and Grover Savage have returned to Salem after spending a visit of several days at the country home of Dr. Ketchum near Independence. They were joined there by Mr. and Mrs. Francis Meyers of Corvallis.

Lloyd Lee who has visited at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Lee for two weeks left yesterday accompanied by his father for his homestead in eastern Washington. A. A. Lee plans to spend a month with his son.

Mrs. A. A. Lee entertained the members of the senior and junior Kings Herald classes of the First Methodist church recently for a happy gathering of young folk. Games and a light luncheon made the time delightful.

Flowers and friends are finding their way to Miss Edith Hazard who suffering a broken bone which resulted in a fall she had at her home a few days ago. Miss Hazard is getting along very well for which her many friends are happy.

Mrs. David Eyre spent yesterday in Portland visiting with friends.

Miss Florence Elgin returned yesterday from a several weeks visit in Portland and Oregon City. For over the Fourth she was a member of a party of 23 which camped at Oswego lake.

Mr. and Mrs. William Staiger returned yesterday from Portland where they visited for several weeks. They were there for the Shrine and rose show and were extensively entertained. Later they visited Mrs. Staiger's sister, Mrs. C. O. Lee at her country home a few miles out from Portland.

D. D. Keeler returned yesterday from an outing of a week spent at Newport.

Mrs. W. C. Conner and son Clara are spending the week-end with relatives at Cottage Grove.

Mrs. Clark Thompson and small children returned home yesterday from spending the week-end in Newport.

Mrs. W. D. Clark and children returned yesterday morning to Salem from Gearhart where they have been the guests of friends for a fortnight. They were joined in Gearhart over the week-end by Mr. Clark and motored to Portland Tuesday with him.

Mrs. Viola Smith returned Tuesday night from Oakland, Cal., after spending the winter with her daughter, Mrs. Levi Card.

Mrs. Ray L. Farmer will entertain for her beginners class of the First Methodist church Friday afternoon with a charmingly planned party. The young girls are to meet at the Methodist church Sunday school room and will go from there to one of the parks for an afternoon of gaiety. They have been asked to meet at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Glover, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Glover and daughter Maxine have returned home after spending several days on a fishing trip near Albany.

A bit of interesting news to the Willamette university set is the announcement of the wedding Tuesday of Miss Eibel Lois Fogg and Harold Dimick which took place at Allan's picnic grounds near Newberg. Both were students of the university last year and were active in school affairs. Small rustic bridges were erected in the wood over which the bride and groom marched to the improvised altar. The wedding march was sung by the Willamette boys glee club. Dr. J. W. McDonald of Spokane, Wash., read the service. Later the guests adjourned to the home of the bride's parents for refreshments.

Mr. and Mrs. Dimick will make their home in Tillamook where the former has been engaged as coach for the high school.

Dr. and Mrs. O. A. Olson and Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Daise returned home yesterday from passing a few days at the Daise cottage at Newport.

The many friends of Mrs. W. W. Emmons will be sorry to learn that she is in Emanuel hospital in Portland where she underwent an operation Tuesday.

The high cost of wedding clothes does not seem to put a crimp in the business of leap year.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Story of a Honeymoon

A Wonderful Romance of Married Life Wonderfully Told by ADELE GARRISON.

CHAPTER 636

HOW MADGE AND HARRY UNDERWOOD SETTLED THEMSELVES FOR THEIR LITTLE TALK TOGETHER.

I shall not soon forget the varying sensations that came to me while traversing at Harry Underwood's side the short block of Fifth avenue between the corner of the public library grounds at Fortieth street and the corner of Thirty-ninth street, round which we turned.

Terror and humiliation were my portion. Fear that Dicky, Grace Draper or even some casual acquaintance should see me walking in apparently friendly fashion with this social pariah hastened my steps to a gait far quicker than the one I usually employ.

I was cowardly enough to shrink, physically and mentally, from the scene I knew would ensue if Grace Draper should catch sight of me. Not that she would have cared a whit if Harry Underwood and I walked the entire length of Fifth avenue and back again. But the pent-up malignancy of her enmity toward me couldn't be restrained if she saw a chance to humiliate me by a scene.

But, of course, the terror which most obsessed me was the possibility of encountering my husband. What Dicky would think, what Dicky would say were he to see me walking with Lillian's recreant husband when he supposed me to be aiding Lillian in a difficult task confronting her, I I shrank from imagining.

The fact that I was aiding Lillian in one of the most difficult tasks she had ever faced wouldn't help the situation in the least. I couldn't explain my presence at Harry Underwood's side except by degrading my connection with Lillian's secret work, about which Lillian, fearing Dicky's careless garrulity, had forbidden me to speak.

"He'd Never Object."

I breathed a little sigh of relief as we rounded the corner into Thirty-ninth street. Harry Underwood looked at me reassuringly.

"You don't need to worry now," he said. "There's no danger of encountering her in this block."

"It isn't that," I murmured involuntarily.

He bent toward me—his face wearing the old quizzical expression I disliked.

"Afraid Friend Husband might pop up in our path?" he asked with intuition that seemed diabolical. "That ought not to trouble you. Old Dicky's about the best friend I've got. He'd never object to your luncheoning with me."

His tone and manner spelled absolute conviction, at which I marvelled. Was it possible that he had no conception of the aversion with which Dicky regarded him because of his caddish desertion of Lillian? Dicky's life-long friend and mentor? Evidently not, for he began to talk of Dicky as if he had just left him around the corner.

I was glad indeed when our entrance into the Fleur de Lis stopped his flow of reminiscences. I saw his brilliant black eyes roving critically over every appointment of the attractive little tea room, as the manager, a stately, gray-haired woman, came smilingly toward us.

"Would you like to sit near the window?" she asked, or will you take your favorite table?"

I fancied that she gave an almost imperceptible glance at my imposing looking escort, and I was thankful that she did not know my name, or, in fact, anything about me save the fact that I had lunched quite frequently at her tea room.

"I would like my usual table," I answered, and she stepped aside to greet other comers while I led the way to the table I had liked when I had lunched at the tea room in the winter, the one nearest the immense open fireplace, which was one of the charms of the tea room.

Now, on this May day, there was no need for a fire, and some one's discriminating taste had put an immense bunch of pussy willows in the copper kettle which swung back from the crane. But the table was one so far back in the room that it was admirably adapted to afford us the freedom from intrusion necessary to our talk.

"By Jove," this isn't a bad looking dump at all!" Mr. Underwood said, looking at the quaint patterns and colorings of the chintz-covered chairs, the really good pictures on the wall, and the dainty china and linens with which the tables were appointed.

"But what a gloomy looking waitress!" he lowered his voice discreetly as the girl, the one who always took my order, placed two glasses of water on the table, laid the menu card before us and stepped aside for a moment to answer the imperious demand of a woman at a neighboring table, who was evidently dissatisfied with some portion of the food placed before her. She'd give me the jim-jams if I had to have her serve my meals very often. She looks exactly as if she were about to say, "Mourners will pass on this side, please."

Trained for the Job?

A local manufacturing concern recently advertised in the papers for a "stock chaser" in the purchasing department.

Many answers were received, but one in particular showed the writer's conception of the job, for he said:
